Generally praiseful; fair and young, and shall'd in housewifery. Chapman's Illud.

Little butter was exported abroad, and thus discredited by the housewifery of the Irish in making it up. Temple.

Female economy.

Learn good works for necessary uses; for St.
Paul expresses the obligation of christian women to good housewifery, and charitable provisions for their family and neighbourhood. Taylor.

HOUSING. n. f. [from house.]

1. Quantity of inhabited building.

London is supplied with people to increase its inhabitants, according to the increase of housing. Green.

3. [from housiour, heufis, or houses, Fr.]
Cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental.

HOUSING. adj. [from house.] Provided for entertainment at first entrance into a house; housewarming.

His own two hands the holy knot did knit,
That none but death for ever can divide.

His own two hands, for such a turn most fit,
The housing fire did kindle and provide. Lucy Queen.

HOUSSE. n. f. [from housiour, or housies, French.] Covering of cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental; housings. This word though used by Dryden, I do not remember in any other place.

Six hous' hinds with the nos together fast,
His upper parts defended to his waist,

And where man ended, the continued vest,
Spread on his back, the hous and trappings of a beast. Dryden.

HOW. adv. [hu, Saxon; hoe, Dutch.]

1. To what degree.

How long wilt thou refuse to bumble thyself

How much better is it to get wisdom than gold, and to get understanding, rather to be chosen than silver? Proverbs.

How oft is the candle of the wicked put out?
And how oft cometh their destruction upon them? Job.

O how love I thy law, it is my meditation. Psalm.

How many children's plaints and mother's cries? Crick.

How many woeful widows left to bow
To sad disgrace? Daniel's Civil War.

Consider into how many differing substances it may be analysed by the fire. Bacon.

2. In what manner.

Mark'd you not,
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence's death? Shakespeare.

Prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom, or how else. Milton's Agonies.

We examine the why and the how of things. Farquhar.

'Tis much in our power how to live, but not at all when or how to die. Farquhar.

It is pleasant to see how the small territories of this little republic are cultivated to the best advantage. Addison on Italy.

3. For what reason; from what cause.

How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale? Shakespeare.

How chance the roses there do fade so fast?
How is it thou hast found it so quickly? Shakespeare.

4. By what means.

Men would have the colours of birds' feathers,
if they could tell how, or they will have gay skins instead of gay clothes. Bacon.

5. In what state.

For how shall I go up to my father? Genesis.

Whence am I forc'd, and whither am I born?
How, and with what reproach shall I return?
Dryden's Fœd.

6. It is used in a sense marking proportion or correspondence.

Behold, he put no trust in his servants, how much less in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust? Job.

A great division fell among the nobility, to much the more dangerous by how much the spirits were more active and high. Hayward.

H O W

By how much they would diminish the present extent of the sea, so much they would impair the fertility, and mountains and rivers of the earth.
Bentley.

7. It is much used in exclamation.

How are the mighty fallen! Samuel.

How doth the city solitary as a widow! Isaiah.

8. In an affirmative sense, not easily explained; that for it is; that.

Thick clouds put us in false hope of land, knowing how that part of the Southern sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents. Bacon.

HOWBEIT. } adv. [how be it.] Neverthe-HOWBEIT. } less; notwithstanding; yet;

however. Not in use.

Shalt thou speak like a lewd fellow,
Of heaven to decieve me?

Howbeit I am but rude and bores,
Yet in other ways I know. Spenser.

Things so ordain'd are to be kept, howbeit not necessarily, any longer than 'till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary. Hooker.

There is a knowledge which God hath always revealed unto them in the works of nature: this they honour and esteem highly as profound wisdom, howbeit this wisdom saveth them not. Hooker.

There was no army transferr'd out of England, howbeit the English colonies in Ireland did win ground upon the Irish. Danvers.

HOWDY. } [contracted from how do ye.]
HOWDY. } In what state is your health? A mesage of civility.

I now write no letters but of plain business, or plain howdy's, to those few I am forced to

HOWEVER. adv. [how and ever.]

1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.

This ring he holds
In his rich choice, yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
However repented of. Shakespeare.

To trace the ways
Of highest agents, deem'd however wife. Milton.

2. At all events; happen what will; at least.

Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, however from the greatest evils, and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, however the chiefest. Tully.

3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.

In your exact your love does little say;
You might however have took a safer way. Dryden.

His views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are however at to great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects. Addison.

I do not bind my reasoning wholly on the case of precipitation, however I do not exclude it. Atterbury.

Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end;
which would, however, be a very useful enquiry. Swift.

4. To some of these meanings this word may be commonly reduced, but its power is sometimes almost evanescent.

TO HOWL. v. n. [huglen, Dutch; ululo,
Latin.]

1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howl'd in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd. Shakespeare's Richard III.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time, Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key. Shakespeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waite howling wilderness. Deuteronomy.

HUC

As when a sort of wolves infect the night,
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light.

Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant tears.

3. To utter cries in distress.
Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab.

The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it.

Each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows Strike Heaven on the face.

I have words
That would be howl'd out to the desert air,
Where hearing should not reach them.

The noise grows louder still.
Rattling of armour, tramping, drums, and halloes,
And sometimes peals of shouts that rattle the heavens.

Like victory then groans again, and howlings
Like those of vanquish'd men.

3. To speak with a belline cry or tone.
Peace, moulder, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale
To savages, and howl it out in deserts.

4. It is used poetically of many noises loud and horrid.
Howl. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.
Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch

These and the like rumours are no more than the howl of a dog directed alive.

2. The cry of a human being in horror.
She raves, she runs with a distracted pace,
And fills with horrid howls the public place.

HOWSOEVER. adv. [how and soever.]
1. In what manner never. See HOWEVER.

Berolus, who, after Moses, was one of the most ancient, however he hath been since corrupted, both in the substance of all agree.

1. Although.
The man dith fear God, howsoever it seems not in him.

To HOUGH. v. a. [from hog, Saxon.] To hough; to hamstring.

This is a coward,
Which have been behind, reforming
From a coward.

Lockman, perceiving the old soldier's meaning, alighted, and with his sword laid his horse, saying aloud, This day, valiant soldiers, shall you have me both your general and fellow soldier, fighting on foot as one of yourselves.

HOY. n. f. [How, old French.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.

He sent to Germany, France and to rear:
From whence emissaries arrived here three boys
Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs.

To define a barge and how, which are between a boat and a ship, is hard.

HOBBLE. n. f. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up, ap, or hobnob.]
A tumult; a riot.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reputation, but the actors were really of the drag of the people.

An universal hubbub wild
Of flaming brands, and voices all confus'd, Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear.
With loudest vehemence.

Why wouldst thou raise a hubbub at her,
And dogs when she flows in water.

HUCKABACK. n. c. A kind of liou on which the figures are raised.

HUD

HUCKLEBACKED. adj. [hocker, German, a bunch, and back.] Crooked in the shoulders.

HUCKLEBONE. n. f. [from hucken, Dut. to sit down.] The hipbone.

HUCKSTER. } n. f. [hock, German, a HUCKSTERER. } pedlar; hockster, a she-pedlar.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandise.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion.

Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down
you fall,
And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,
The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee mean,
But peace expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown.

There should be a confederacy of all servants,
to drive those China hucksters from the doors.

Those hucksters or money-pubbers will be found necessary, if this brass-money is made current.

2. A trickish mean fellow.
Now the ape wanted his huckster man.

To HUCKSTER. v. n. [from the noun.]
To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling, for changing their piece into silver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade.

To HUNDLE. v. a. [probably from hood.]
1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to mottle.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry.
At twelve the role with such ado,
Her cloaths were huddled on by two.

Now all in haste they huddle on Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone

3. To cover up in haste.
4. To perform in a hurry.

I have given much application to this poem
this is not a play huddled up in haste.

When continu'd rain
The labring husband in his house's refrain,
Let him foretell his work with busy care,
Which else is huddled when the flows are fair.

5. To throw together in confusion.
Our silly story, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion.

To HUNDLE. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back
Enough to press a royal merchant down.

Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner
Thyris, while artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to bear his insatiable,
And sweeten'd every measure of the dale.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others,
for they will run against things, and, huddling forwards, fall from high places.

HUNDLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion; with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the world.

Your carrying business in a huddle,
Has forc'd our colliers to new models.

Nature hath nothing in a huddle.
The underling wing sees nothing distinctly in things remote, and is a huddle.

HUF

Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us till bedtime, and filled my mind with a huddle of ideas.

HUZ. n. f. [hiese, Saxon.]
1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady she before did view,
Or that dread lyon's look her cast in deadly hue.

To add another hue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Flow'rs of all hue, and without thorn the rose,
To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue,

Answer'd.
Your's is much of the candelion hue,
To change the die with distant view.

2. [hufe, French.] A clamour; a legapursuit; an alarm given to the country.
It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Alas! me, knight, am undone: fly, run, hue and cry! villain, am undone.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;
And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry.

The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found.

HUER. n. f. [huier, French, to cry.]
One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a baker or huer, who stands on the cliff-side, and from thence directs the coast of the pilchard.

HUFF. n. f. [from hove, or heven, fuelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread is up, when it begins to heave or ferment.

huff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.
Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To fear by, only in a huff,
In others it is but a huff.

To vapour with insufferable pride,
His brow kept up in a huff, as he went,
Before the bluster of which huff

All hats, as in a storm, flew off.
We have the appearance of a clown, who a check upon us in the very huff of our nature.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the about his extraction.

No man goes about to quarrel or quarrel another in a passion, to lay train and give out blows in a present huff.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

As for you, colonel huff-ear, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greatest pouter.

Lowd shallow-brained huffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge of character of wit.

To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the nose pipe.

2. To hock; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

The commissioner at Magdalen college said to
Dr. Hough, you must not presume to huff us.

To HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to hork to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

HUM

1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecate's summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakespeare
Nor undelightful is the careless hum,
To him who mules through the woods at noon. Thomson

2. A low confused noise, as of bustling crowds at a distance.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army still rebounds. Shallp.
Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton

One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilom of requests was call'd the court,
But now the great exchange of news is high,
And full of hum and bust from noon till night. Pope

3. Any low dull noise.

Who tar the nearest, by the words of someone,
Slept fast the dillant nodded to the hum. Pope

4. A pause with an articulate sound.

These thrugs, their hums and haws,
When you have had the play only come between,
Here you can say the hum. Shakespeare
Your exciles want some words to make 'em current. And he will not do the business
Dequien's Spanish Essay

5. In Hudibras it seems used for hum.

And though his countrymen the Hums,
Did stew their meat between their hums
And the horses back, on which they straddle,
And every man eat up his saddle. Hudibras

6. An expression of applause.

You bet a hum in the right place. Spectator
HUM. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your eyes dispute the I have found That ever yet they heard.
— Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare's Macbeth
See Mr. Robertson's

And never laugh at any man to come. Pope

HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Lat. humanus,
French]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will never be asked whether he be a gentle man born, but whether he be a human creature. Swift

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am; the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare
For man to tell how human life began
Is hard, for who himself beginning knew? Milton

Thee, serpent, subtil'st beast of all the field,
I knew, but not with human voice add'd. Milton Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any, this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke

HUMANE. adj. [humane, Fr.] Kind; civil; benevolent; good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few,
doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon

Envy, malice, covetousness and revenge are abolished, a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead. Spart.

HUMANELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakespeare

HUMANIST. n. f. [humaniste, Fr.] A philologist; a grammarian; a term used in the schools of Scotland.

HUMANITY. n. f. [humanité, Fr. humanitas, Latin.]

1. The nature of man.

HUM

Look to thyself: reach not beyond humanity.

A rarer spirit never did pierce humanity. Shallp.
The middle of humanity thou never knewest,
but the extremity of both ends. Shakespeare
To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind
by his information. Glaucius

3. Benevolence; tenderness.

All men ought to maintain peace and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke
How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And ease the offices of soft humanity?
Like thee relieve their timentalities naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Rice

4. Philology; grammatical studies. In Scotland, humaniores literæ.

TO HUMANIZE. v. a. [humaniter, Fr.]
To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

Here will I paint the character of a man,
And here my faithful tears in show shall flow,
To witness the faith whereon I stand. Waller
Was it the business of us such to humanize natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Atterbury

HUMANITY. n. f. [human and kind]
The race of man; mankind.

Bless with a taste civil, yet unconfined,
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope

HUMANLY. adv. [from human.]

1. After the notions of men; according to the power of man.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs, humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Atterbury

2. Kindly; with good-nature. This is now written humanely.

Though learn'd, well bred, and though well bred, sincere,
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope

HUM-BIRD. n. f. [from hum and bird.]
The humming bird.

All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our own plantations have showed one far less, that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown

HUMBLE. adj. [humble, Fr. humilis, Lat.]
1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield. Spenser

Now we have shown our power
Let us seem humble after it is done,
Than when it was a doing.
Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service, till the point of death. Shakespeare's Henry v.

We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins, as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Taylor

You, an humble husband, may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryden
Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move
Should be humble who would please,
And the most suffer, who can love. Prior

2. Low; not high; not great.

Th' example of the heavenly host,
Thy fellow-poor, Cowley, mark!
Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble self build on the ground. Cowley
Denied what every wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden

HUM

Ain! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell

With humbler fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty!

Far humbler titles suit my lost condition.

TO HUM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make humble; to make subservient; to make to bow down with humility.

Take this part, thou whom the heavens plagues

Have humbled to all strokes

The executioner

Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you

Herckiah humbled himself for the plague of his heart.

Why do I humble thus myself, and
For peace, to get nothing but a painful end?

Let the fanner put away the chaff of idleness, and his fan blow it by a speedy and final punishment, let us return to God, who will have us attend that God will remain true.

2. To crush; to break; to subvert; to mortify.

You may suppose, some say, some deny,
This would be a strong expression of to dash to pieces, to break to pieces.

We are pleased by the approach of young, to see that they are not reputation, who had to far to go to us.

The mistress of the world, the mistress of The name of heroes, the daughter of that humbled the proud tyrant.

Men that make a kind of mortification ought to be humble in their hearts, to get trumpidity.

Fortune not much of herking me, and Though double tax'd, he will have his share.

3. To make to condescend.

This would not be to condescend to the poor, when he humbles himself to them, but to let him down in speaking.

4. To bring down from a height.

In process of time the highest mountains be humbled into valleys, and again the low valleys exalted into mountains. H. W.

HUMBLEBEE. n. f. [humble and bee.]

What may be the true etymology of this word I am in doubt. The humble bee is known to have no sting. The Scotch call a cow without horns a humble cow; so that the word seems to be nearly in error, wanting the natural weapons. Dr. Beattie A buzzing wild bee.

The honeybags steal from the humble bee,
And for night tapers crop their waxen thighs. Shallp.

This puts in mind once again, of the humble and the humble boxes.

HUMBLEBEE. n. f. An herb.

HUMBLEBEE. Enter. n. f. A fly that eats the humblebee.

HUMBLENESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humility; abstinence of pride.

With how true humbleness
They look'd down to triumph over pride! Shallp.

I am rather with all subjected humbleness, to thank her excellencies, since the duty hereunto gave me rather heart to save myself, than to receive thanks.

It was answered by us all, in all possi-

HUM

humble; but yet with a countenance, that we knew he spoke it but merrily. Bacon.

A grain of glory, mixed with humbleness, cures both a fever and lethargickness. Herbert.
HUMBLER. n. f. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others.

HUMBLEMOUTHED. adj. [humble and mouthe.] Mild; meek.

You are meek and humblemouth'd: but your heart is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride. Shakespeare.

HUMBLEPLANT. n. f. A species of sensitive plant.

The humbleplant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, it prostrates itself on the ground, and in a short time elevates itself again: it is raised in hotbeds. Mortimer.

HUMBLE. n. f. Entrails of a deer.

HUMBLESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humbleness; humility. Obsolete.

And with meek humbleness, and afflicted mood, Pardon for thee, and grace for me intreat. Spenser.

HUMBLY. adv. [from humble.]

Without pride; with humility; modestly; with timorous modesty.

They were us'd to bend, To send their smiles before them to Achilles, To come humbly as they us'd to creep to holy altars. Shakespeare.

Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death, By goodness I'll adore; And praise thee for thy mercies past, And humbly hope for more. Addison.

Without height; without elevation.

HUMDRUM. adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone.] Dull; drowsy; stupid.

Shall we, quoth she, stand still humdrum, And see stout Bruin, all alone, By numbers basely overthrown? Hudibras.
I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, And, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business. Addison.

HUMECT. } v. a. [humecto, HUMECTATE. } Lat. humecter,
French.] To wet; to moisten.

The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate the earth by their annual inundations. Brown.

Her rivers are divided into sluices, to humectate the bordering soil. Houell's Vocal Forest.

The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much astringent. Wifeman.

HUMECTATION. n. f. [humectation, Fr. from humectate.] The act of wetting; moistening.

Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercussion, without humectation, or entrance of any body. Bacon's Natural History.

That which is concreted by calcification, or excretion of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay. Brown.

HUMERAL. adj. [humeral, French, from humerus, Latin.] Belonging to the shoulder.

The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

HUMICUBATION. n. f. [humi and cubo,

HUM

Latin.] The act of lying on the ground.

Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humicubations, used to be companions of repentance. Brashel.

HUMID. adj. [humide, French; humidus, Latin.] Wet; moist; watery.

Is there, with humid bow, Waters the odorous banks that blow Flowers of more mingl'd hue Than her purpled scarf can shew. Milton.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes, And first her husband on the poop espies. Dryden.
If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid, and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opticks.

HUMIDITY. n. f. [humidite, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies.

Humidity differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to; but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing, for it runs and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We'll use this unwholesome humidite, this gross watry pumpon. Shakespeare.
O blessing-breeding sun, draw from the earth Rotten humidity, below the filter's orb Insect the air! Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and refining. Arbutnot.

HUMILIATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled, for what power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Heron.

Thy humiliation shall exalt With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milton.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.

John fared poorly, according as to the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair, and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

With tears Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air Frequenting, lent from hearts contrite, in sign Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

3. Abatement of pride.

It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the halats and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMILITY. n. f. [humilité, French.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

HUM

I do not know that Englishman alive, With whom my soul is any jot at odds, More than the infant that is born to-night, I thank my God for my humility. Shakespeare.
What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humility of a christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.

There are some that use Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder. De Witt.

At their wild's journey's end It is an easy matter to extol humility in the midst of honour, or to begin a fair after distress. De Witt.

As high turn'd for their airy steep, Require foundations in proportion deep, And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot, As to the nether heavens they drive the root, So low did her secure foundation lie, She was not humble, but humil. De Witt.

2. Act of submission.

With these humilities they fasted the young king, and by their bowing and bending paid the present from. D.

HUMMER. n. f. [from hum.] That which hums; an applauder. Amend.

HUMORAL. adj. [from humour.] Proceeding from the humours.

This for to ever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harrison on Consumption.

HUMORIST. n. f. [humorista, Italian; humorist, French.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things, his actions seldom directed by the reason or nature of things. Water.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison.

2. One who has odd conceits.

The wat'rs impetuously into an humorist. Spectator.

3. One who has violent and peculiar passions.

By a wife and timeous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off entirely, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon's Letters.

HUMOROUS. adj. [from humour.]

1. Full of grotesque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Mary's was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the future Mary's, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison in Italy.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous politician, fond to be something more free, in favouring the complaint; fussy and tender-like, upon too trivial matters. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou humorous champion, that dost never fight

For when her humorous ladyship's by, To touch thee faintly. Shakespeare's King John.

He's humorous is water, and as sudden As flaws conveyed in the spring of day. Shakespeare.

O, you awake then, come away, Times be short, are made for play, The humorous moon too will not stay.

What doth make you thus delay? Ben Jonson.

Vain is his courage, headless in his mind, Rough as a fern, and humorous as the wind. Dryden.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence in persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts's Logics.

HUN

HUR

Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.
For hunger of my gold I dye. Dryden.

HUNGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To feel the pain of hunger.

My more having, would be as a fance
To make me hunger more. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

To desire with great eagerness; to long.

Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours?
Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!
Stay but a little. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

I content me,

And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed Me hungering more to do my Father's will. Milton.

HUNGERBIT. } adj. [hunger and HUNGERBITTEN. } bit.] Paired or weakened with hunger.

His strength shall be hungerbitten. Job.
Thyself

Bred up in poverty and straits at home;
Lost in a desert here, and hungerbit. Milton.

HUNGERLY. adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nourishment.

His beard

Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to ask
His lips as he was drinking. Shakespeare.

HUNGRILY. adv. With keen appetite.

You have sav'd my longing, and I feed
Not hungerly on your sight. Shakespeare.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakespeare

HUNGERSTARVED. adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or launch pur'd by hungerstarved wolves. Shaksp.

Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men. Shakespeare.

As in some holy house th' afflicted came,
Th' hungerstarv'd, the naked, and the lame,
Want and diseases fled before her name. Dryd.

HUNGRED. adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.

Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we be men as hungered love to smell hot bread. Bacon.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suffering mortals long ago;
When on harsh scorn'd hungerly they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryd.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

Feeling pain from want of food.

That side of him the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakespeare

By eating before he was hungry, and drinking before he was dry, he was sure never to eat or drink much at a time. Temple.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it, whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

Not fat; not fruitful; not prolix; and more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shaksp.
The more fat water will bear soap best, for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon.

In rusty grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

To the great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soils. Smalridge.

HUNKS. n. f. [hunker, sordid, Islandick.] A covetous sordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.

The old hunk was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his pen-dings. L'Estrange.

She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old hunk. Dryden.

Trus has given all the intinuations of being a close hunk, worth money. Addison.

TO HUNT. v. a. [huntian, Sax. from hunb, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did fell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shakespeare.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Psalms.

The heart strikes five hundred sorts of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that tan would it break. Harvey on Conjunctions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Speiser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from principles: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison.

TO HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Shaksp. King Lear.

Ena went to the field to hunt for venison. Gen.

One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.

On the old pagan tombs, monks, hunting matches, and bacchanals are very common. Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd

By for'ign pow'r, her company disdain'd, Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryd. Hud and Panther.

2. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakespeare.

3. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

HUNTER. n. f. [from hunt.]

1. One who chafes animals for pastime or food.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, bogs, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the bent that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursued a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton.

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Æneid.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manlius lets us know the pagan hunters had Melager for their patron. Addison on Italy.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beads of prey.

Of dogs, the val'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakespeare.

HUNTINGHORN. n. f. [hunting and horn.] A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HUNTERS. n. f. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy hunters' name, that my full life doth sway. Shakespeare.

Shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?

Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow, Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder, but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broome.

HUNTSMAN. n. f. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a huntsman, after weary chase,
Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser's Sonnets.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What huntsman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chase? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the huntsman, that managed the chase, than to the master. L'Estrange.

HUNTSMANSHIP. n. f. [from huntsman.]
The qualifications of a hunter.

At court you fellows every day
Give the art of running, huntsmanship, or play. Deane.

HURDLE. n. f. [hyrdel, Saxon.]

crate.

The sled, the tumbril, hurdles, and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden's Georg.

2. Crate on which criminals were dragged to execution.

Settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither. Shaksp.

The blacksmith was hanged, drawn, and quarter'd at Tyburn; taking pleasure upon the hurdle, to think that he should be famous in after-times. Bacon.

HURDS. n. f. The refuse of hemp or flax.

TO HURL. v. a. [from hurle, to throw] down, hurled; or, according to Skinner, from whirl.]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.

It heav'n has any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee! Shakespeare's Richard III.

He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
Shakespeare.

I with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame. Shakespeare.
If he thrust him or hurled, or hurl at him by laying of wail. Numbers.

They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones. Chronicles.

Hurl ink and wail,
As a drunken troupe. Ben Jonson.

His darling sons,
Hurl'd like a flock of geese with us, shall curse
Their father's name, who load'd them with. Milton.

See hurl the late, but it is found,
The atoms of the world, the ground. Haller.

Corrupted, 'tis a knowledge hurled
Down death, and glory, over all the world.
Dryden.

Young Theron
From east to west, is regularly hurled,
But not hatched on a hill, and then the world.
Dryden's Journal.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurled them headlong to their feet and main. Pope.

2. To utter with vehemence. [hurler, Fr. to make a howling or hideous noise.]
This sense is not in use.

The glad merchant that does view
His ship far come from wat'ry wilderness,
He hurts out vows. Spenser.

Highly they rag'd against the Highest,
Hurling defiance towards the vaults of heav'n.
Milton.

3. To play at a kind of game.
Hurling takes its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts, to goals, and to the country. For to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, each on his station on each side, who help themselves, and throw in hands in ranks, one against another, and of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and in pairs away, every of which couple are to watch one another during the play. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HURLE, n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult;

as in cities presently to be besieged. Annot.

HURRICANE, n. f. [huracan, Span.
HURRICANO, n. f. [ouragan, Fr.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanes spout! Shakespeare.
A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havoc where it comes.

Burnet's Theory.
A poet who had a great genius for tragedy,
made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and bluttering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends with-law,
There, in dead murmurs, solemnly are wile,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise.

Dryden.
So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend.
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.

Addison.
HURRY, n. f. [from hurry.] One that hurries; a disturber.

Men, that hurry of men. Chapman.
To HURRY, v. n. [hangan, to plunder, Saxon; hurs was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy,
And wild amusement hurry up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

Shakespeare.
For whom all this haste
Of midnight watch, and hurry'd meeting here?

Milton.
Impetuous lust hurry him on to satisfy it.

South.
That hurry'd o'er
Such fears of English to the neighbouring shore.

Dryden.
A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish himself in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Addison.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away. Rowe's Royal Convert.

It is said he called, or a battle fought, you are not fully informed the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination. Pope.

To HURRY, v. n. To move on with precipitation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end.

Dryden.
HURRY, n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult;
precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England,
Ireland was then almost quiet. Hayward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displeased his humanity in the sedate reflection. South.

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Woodward.

Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addison.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry.

Addison.
I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged. Addison.

The pavement founds with trampling feet,
And the mist hurry barricades the street. Gray.

HYMN. n. f. [ᾠδή, Fr. hymne.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superiour being.

As I learn, in praise of mine own dame, So now in honour of thy mother dear, An honourable hymn I like should frame.

Our solemn hymns to fatten dirges change; Our bridal flow to serve for a buried coarce. When steel grows soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made An overture for the wars.

HYP

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah, and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour.

Later, ye happy ladies, Where ere ye should preside, and sing Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would sing.

TO HYMN. v. a. [ὕμνω.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.

Whole business were to serve the Lord High up in heav'n, with tongues to hymn his throne.

TO HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and sang God and his words.

He had not left alive this part of east, This land of affluence, but to him to see, To hold a peace in his hand of palm above, And hymn it in the organ.

HYMNICK. adj. [ὕμνος.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats; Which, if they did not, might seem to be A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy.

TO HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

HYPHEN. n. f. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires.

Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men, And hypers upon them again.

HYPERBOLA. n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολή and βάλλω.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the elliptic intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentric.

HYPERBOLE. n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολή.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: He runs faster than lightning. His passions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him.

Terms unfigur'd Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt, Would seem hyperboles.

Taught phrases, silken terms precise, Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation, Figures podantical, these summer flies, Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects.

HYP

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold, Disclaiming bounds, are yet by rules controld; Above the clouds, but yet within our sight, They meet with truth, and make a towering flight.

The common people with head railery, or at least rhetoric, and will not take hyperboles in their estimation.

HYPERBOLICAL. adj. [hyperbolique, Fr. hyperbolique, Lat.]

I.

I, is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thin, which is usually marked with an e final; and a short sound, as fit, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, as: thus field, yield, are spoken as field, yield, except friend, which is spoken as friend. Subjoined to o or e it makes them long as foal, neigh; and to a makes a diphthong sound, which approaches more nearly

As, after stumbling, Jews will mend their pace.

JAG

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice. Shall these, their old jades, pass the time of youth, that you have, pass you Chapman. But this, the cunning's tale of life, Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney Get in, hussy: now will I persuade this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern
In diamonds, pearls, and rich brocades, She shines the first of butter-jades,
And butters in her pride. Swift

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the flirts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison

JADE, n. f. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale bluish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it has a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill

To JADE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks, The never-yet-beaten horse of Partina We're jaded out of the field. Shakespeare

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches call No favour for the shallow we retain.

And no respect for the degenerate strain. Dryden
The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke

There are seasons when the brain is over-tired or jaded with study or thinking; and upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely, To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet, Farewell nobility. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shaks.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not bow foul myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this. Shaks.

To JADE, v. n. To lose spirit; to sink. Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South

JA'DISH, adj. [from jade.]

1. Vitious; bad, as a horse.

That horse'd us on their backs, to show us A jaded trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras
When once the people get the jaded trick Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe. Southern

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

To JAGG, v. d. [gagaw, flits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Brown
The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak leaves; but they never have any small plain parts. Brown

JAL

The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts

JAGG, n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs in the hurr, and make them as smooth as possible. Motimer's Husbandry

JA'GGEY, adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His towering crest was glorious to behold; His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold; Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes; His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Idylls

Amid' those angles, infinitely strand'd, They joyful leave their jaggy tails behind. Thompson

JA'GGEDNESS, n. f. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Precheron on Drawing

JAIL, n. f. [geol, Fr.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GYOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the coward, to the jail with him. Shakespeare

Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm?

Addison.

JAUNDICE. n. f. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, French.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straiten the motion of the blood so much through that viscous, as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick; to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,

Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being perversish? Shakspeare Merchant of Venice.

Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,
Till not rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinctured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearance of things. Watts.

JAUNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

To JAUNT. r. n. [jaunter, French.] To wander here and there; to bustle about.
It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke.

Shakspeare's Richard III.

JAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Ramble; sight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour went, and with untrobb'd hand,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd fore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.

He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses on the night to haunt. Hudibras.

They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court. L'Estrange.

It you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it fastest. Dryden's Span. Fier.

Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part I have run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out those necessary and material bodies.

Woodward.

IG. n. f. [giga, Italian; geige, Teuto-nick, a fiddle.] A light careless dance, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike music, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs, by which he to mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser on Ireland

As fiddlers fill,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Donne

Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. Ben Jonson

All the fountains that there abide,
With ages and mirth dance resort. Milton

1. Wickedness; depravity; contrariety to holiness.

It, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon

Young men to imitate all ills are prone,
But are compell'd to advance alone.
For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dequain's Juvenal.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles full,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can afford ten's of others ills escape,
Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate
Thou'lt plunge'd in ills and exercis'd in care,
Yet never let the noble mind despair;
When press'd by dangers, and beset with foes,
The gods their timely in our interpose;
And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief. A. Phillips.

 self not to be ill qualified, because I have had opportunities to observe the follies of women. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end, to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished potion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
 Her thoughts intensive on the bridal day. Pope.
 Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain. Dryden.

The god miserr'd

IMAGINARY. adj. [imaginaire, Fr. from imaginer.] Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.

False tower's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakespeare

Expectation whirled me round.
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet.
That it enchants my sense. Shakespeare

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the success of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer, Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French; from imaginer.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kind: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination fabled and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon

Our simple apprehension of corporeal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Locke

O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's fast figures melt away. Pope

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidney

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfeeling imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakspere

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs,
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspere

His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis

3. Contrivance; scheme.

Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lamentations

4. An unfold or fanciful opinion.

VOL. I.

We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself, leads us. Locke

IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, French; from imaginer.] Fantastick; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon

Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of living holy

TO IMAGINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginar, Latin.]

1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagined speed. Shakespeare

Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakespeare

Those trembling feet by justice are paraly'd. Prior.
There, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The dreadful monster train can delir'd
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whole panting vitals, warm with life the draws,
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.
His virgin blood, Agyllus' veins embru'd;
The murderer fell, and blood aton'd for blood. Pope.

A good man chafes rather to pass by a verbal injury than embrue his hands in blood. Clarke.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathed kisses, and did oft embrue
The finger'd liquor through his melting lips. Fairy Queen.

To IMBRUTE. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.

I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to menurate and imbrute. Milton.

To IMBRUTE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbrutes and imbrutes, 'till the quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

To IMBUE. v. a. [imbuo, Latin.] This word, which seems wanting in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest.

Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe or soak with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastic learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.
Clothes which have once been thoroughly im- bued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colours. Boyle.

I M M

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and imbued with the colour. Hoodford.

To IMBUER. v. a. [imbue, Fr.] To stock with money. This should be em- buise, from embouriser, French.

IMITABILITY. n. f. [imitabilitas, Latin.]
The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this inimitability, to are the possibilities of being. Norcia.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Lat. imitable,
French.]

1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish court? Reland.
As acts of parliament are not regarded by imit- able writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hagars.

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stages of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Arbut.

To IMITATE. v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter,
French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practice to make wiser, &c.
more than any out of your market. Boyle.
Despite wealth, and imitate a god. Clay.
I would care to some resemblance of
And imitate his language and his countenance. Marlowe.

2. To counterfeit.

Thy hand appear'd a shining face to show;
And that Indian d an imitated face. Pope.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what imitate an old man? Boyle.

IMITATION. n. f. [imitatio, Latin; imitation,
French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater. Boyle.
Both the poets are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating lower than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestick for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but he takes them as he sees occasion; and, to do only some general hints from the original, and division upon the ground-work. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Latin.]

1. Inclined to copy; as, man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance; as, painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.

This temple, set in form, with equal grace,
Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITATOR. n. f. [Latin; imitateur, Fr.]
One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, say the poet. Dryden.

IMMACULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Lat.
immaculé, French.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hobbes.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shaksp.
The king, whom catholics count a saint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure
From other guilts as that, Heaven did not hold
One more immaculate. Dehkan's Sophy.
1. Pure; limpid.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath had his current and defil'd himself. Shaksp.
To IMMA'NACLE. v. a. [from manacle.] To fetter; to confine.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporeal mud Thou hast immanucl'd. Milton.

IMMA'NE. adj. [from manis, Latin.] Vast; prodigiously great.

IMMANENT. adj. [from inmanens, French; in and maneo, Latin.] Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellects, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glauville.

What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMANIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest; not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Bacon.

IMMANITY. n. f. [from immanitas, Latin.] Barbarity; savageness.

That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Shaksp.

IMMARCESCIBLE. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.] Unfading. Diet.

IMMARTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My powers are unfit, Myself immortal. Chapman's Odyssey.

IMMA'SK. v. a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments. Shakspere.

IMMATERIAI. adj. [from immaterial, French; in and materia, Latin.]

Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual,
the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces,
where there is nothing but light and immortality,
no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon;
but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;
So hath she not a body of her own,
But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Darwin.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Dean of Picty.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillot.

Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIA'LIITY. n. f. [from immaterial.] Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATERIAI'LY. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporeal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glauville's Steps.

IMMATERIAI'NESS. n. f. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIAI'LY. adj. [in and materia, Latin.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereas there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immeric in matter, I interpolate some object which is imma-teriate, or less material; such as this of sounds. Bacon.

IMMATURE. adj. [from immaturus, Lat.]

1. Not ripe.
2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprize of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Bacon.

This is your time for action and debate,
For partial favour, and permitted hate:
Let now your immature disension cease, Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives 'till seventy. Taylor.

IMMATURELY. adv. [from immature.]

Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

IMMATURENESS. } n. f. [from immature.]

IMMATUREITY. } Unripeness; incompleteness; a state short of completion.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgment. Glauville.

IMMEASURABILITY. n. f. [from immemabilis, Latin.]

Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example; but it is rather, incapability of affording passage.

From this phlegm proceed white cold tumours, viscidities, and consequently immeasurability of the juices. Arbutnot

IMMEASURABLE. adj. [in and measure.]

Immenfe; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them. Hooker.

From the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss, Outrageous as a sea, dark wasteful, wild. Milton.

Immeasurable strength they might behold
In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean. Milton.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with, that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether! Addison's Guardian.

Nor can there be there, nor vessels to convey.

Nor can to cut th' immeasurable way. Pope.

IMMEASURABLY. adv. [from immeasurabile.] Immensely; beyond all measure.
The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their dead. Spenser.

There ye shall be fed, and fill'd Immeasurably, all things shall be your prey. Milton.

IMMECHANICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanicks.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature. Chapman.

Nothing will clear a head possessed with inechanical notions. Mead.

IMMEDIACY. n. f. [from immediate.]

Personal greatness; power of acting without dependance. 'This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar, I believe, to Shakspere.

He led our powers,
Bore the commission of my place and person,
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother. King Lear.

IMMEDIATE. adj. [from immediatus, French; in and nudius, Latin.]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes of the deluge, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that continuation of the heavens. Barnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be attributed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time.
Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Shakspere.

Death denounc'd that day,
Which he professes already vain, and void,
Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd
By some immediate stroke. Milton.

But she, how'er of victory sure,
Contents the wrath too long delay'd;
And arm'd with more immediate power,
Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

IMMEDIATELY. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God. South.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.

Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with slender, and wub him at Eaton Immediately to marry. Shakspere.

IMMEDIATENESS. n. f. [from immediate.]

1. Preference with regard to time.

2. Exemption from second or intervening causes.

IMMEDIICABLE. adj. [from immedicabilis, Lat.]

Not to be healed; incurable.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rauklo and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton's Agonistes.

IMMEMORABLE. adj. [from immemorabilis, Latin.] Not worth remembering.

IMMEMORIAL. adj. [from immemorial, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorial in writing; yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom. Hale.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat. South.

IMMENSE. adj. [immense, French; immensus, Latin.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense! That all this good of evil shall produce! Motion As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, to infinite or immense essence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immense being. Green.

IMMENSELY. adv. [from immense.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal parts. Bentley.

IMMENSITY. n. f. [immensité, French.] Unbounded greatness; infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity. Locke.

He that will consider the immensity of this fabric, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All these illustrious worlds, And millions which the glaze can never defray, Lost in the wilds of vast immensity, Are suns, are centers. Blackmore's Creation.

IMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from immensurable.] Impossibility to be measured.

IMMENSURABLE. adj. [in and mensurable, Latin.] Not to be measured.

To IMMERGE. v. a. [immergo, Latin.] To put under water.

IMMERIT. n. f. [immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of desert. This is a better word than demerit, which is now used in its stead.

When I receive your lines, and find there expressions of a passion, reason and my own immert tell me it must not be for me. Sackville.

To IMMERSE. v. a. [immersus, Latin.]

1. To put under water.

2. To sink or cover deep.

More than a mile immersed within the wood; At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They observed that they were immersed in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom; whether they be such as continue still immersed in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of it. Addison's Freeholder.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world: we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves too deeply in the enjoyments of them. Atterbury.

It is impossible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immersed in the enjoyments of this. Atterbury.

IMMERSE. adj. [immersus, Lat.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immersed in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bacon.

IMMERSION. n. f. [immersio, Latin; immersion, French.]

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion. Addison's Guardian.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.

3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

Many persons, who, through the heat of their passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, were from the rules of their holy faith; yet would, upon extraordinary warnings, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

IMMETHODICAL. adj. [in and methodical.] Confused; being without regularity; being without method.

M. Bayle compares the answering of an immethodical author to the hunting of a duck: when you have him full in your sight, he gives you the slip, and becomes invisible. Addison.

IMMETHODICALLY. adv. [from immethoudical.] Without method; without order.

IMMINENCE. n. f. [from imminent.] Any ill impending; immediate or near danger. Not in use.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death; But dare all imminence, that gods and men Address their dangers in. Shakespeare.

IMMINENT. adj. [imminent, French; imminens, Latin.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill sense.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hooker.

Three times to-day You have defuded me from imminent death. Shakespeare.

The se she applies for warnings and portents Of evils imminent, and on her knee Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day. Shakespeare.

To them preach'd Conversion and repentance, as to souls In prison, under judgments imminent. Milton.

Men could not fail without imminent danger and inconveniences. Pope.

To IMMINGLE. v. a. [in and mingle.]

To mingle; to mix; to unite.

Some of us, like thee, through stormy life Toild, tempest-beaten, ere we could attain This holy calm, this harmony of mind, Where purity and peace immingle charms. Thomson.

IMMINUTION. n. f. [from imminuo, Latin.] Diminution; decrease.

These revolutions are as exactly uniform as the earth's are, which could not be, were there any place for chance, and did not a Providence continually oversee and secure them from all alteration or immutation. Ray on the Creation.

IMMISCIABILITY. n. f. [from immiscible.] Incapacity of being mingled.

IMMISCIBLE. adj. [in and miscible.] Not capable of being mingled. Clarissa.

Immovably firm to their duty, when they could have no prospect of reward! Atterbury.

IMMUNITY. n. f. [immunité, French;
immunitas, Latin.]

1. Discharge from any obligation.
Of things human's whatsoever there is, which the whole church doth observe, to argue for man's immunity from observing the same, it were a point of most insolent madness! Hooker.

2. Privilege; exemption from onerous duties.

Granting great immunities to the commons, they prevailed so far as to cause Palladius to be proclaimed successor. Sidon.
Simon sent to Demetrius, to the end he should give the land an immunity, because all that Tryphon did was to fool. 1 Maccabees.
The last invidiously aggravate the rights and immunities of the clergy. Spratt's Sermons.

3. Freedom.
Common apprehensions entertain the antedotal condition of Ireland, concerning only in that land an immunity from venomous creatures.

But this annu'd condition of the crown,
Immunity from errors, you disown. Dryden.

To IMMUNE. v. a. [in and munus, Lat. emuer, old French, so that it might be written emuer.] To enclose within walls; to confine; to shut up; to imprison.

Pity, you ancient times, these tender babes,
Whom envy hath immured within your walls!

One of these three contains her heavenly picture;
And shall I think in favour the summer's day?

At the first descent on shore he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his land-boat. Watts.

With wanton Paris sleeps. Shakspeare.

IMMUSICAL. adj. [in and musical.] Inharmonious; wanting proportion of sound.

All sounds are either musical, which are ever equal, or immusical, which are ever unequal, as the voice in speaking, and whispering. Bacon.
We consider the immusical note of all forms we ever beheld or heard of. Brown.

IMMUTABILITY. n. f. [immutabilitas, Lat.
immutabilité, Fr. from immutabile.] Exemption from change; invariableness;
unchangeableness.

The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hooker.

His existence will of itself continue for ever,
unless it be destroyed, which is impossible,
from the immutability of God. Cheyne.

IMMUTABLE. adj. [immutabilis, Lat.]
Unchangeable; invariable; unalterable.

I M P

By two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lye, we have a strong confirmation. Hebrews.

Thy threatenings, Lord, as thine, thou may'st revoke;

But if immutable and fix'd they stand,
Continue still thyself to give the stroke,
And let not foreign foes oppress thy land. Dryden.

IMMUTABLY. adv. [from immutable.]
Unalterably; invariably; unchangeably.
His love is like his essence, immutablely eternal.

IMP. n. f. [imp, Welsh, a shoot, a sprout,
a sprig.]

1. A son; the offspring; progeny.
That noble imp your son.

And thou, most dreadful imp of highest Jove, Fair Venus' son. Fairy Queen.
The tender imp was weaned from the teat.

A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakspeare.

2. A subaltern devil; a puny devil. In this sense it is still retained.

Such we deny not to be the imps and limbs of Satan. Hooker.

The serpent after long debate, irresolute
Of thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence close, Fit vessel, hatcht imp of fraud, in whom
To enter, and his dark suggestions hide
From sharpest sight. Milton's Parad. Lost.

As soon as you can hear his knell,
This god on earth turns d— in hell;
And, lo! his ministers of state,
Transform'd to imps, his love wait.

To IMP. v. a. [impro, to engraft, Welsh.]
To lengthen or enlarge with any thing additious. It is originally a term used by falconers, who repair a hawk's wing with additious feathers.

If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our drooping country's broken wings.

New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false north displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings.

Help, ye tart layrills, to imp my rage
With all the scorpions that should whip this age.

With cord and canvas from rich Hamburgh sent,
His navy's molted wings he imps once more.

New creatures rise,
A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;
Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,
The gulls proceed to bees with pointed flings.

The Mercury of heav'n, with silver wings
Imps for the flight, to overtake his ghost.

To IMPACT. v. a. [impactus, Latin.] To drive close or hard.

They are angular, but of what particular figure is not easy to determine, because of their being impacted to thick and confusedly together.

To IMPACT. v. a. [in and paint.] To paint; to decorate with colours. Not in use.

Never yet did infection want
Such water-colours to impaint his cause. Shakspeare.

To IMPUR. v. a. [empurer, to make worse, French. Skinner.] To diminish; to injure; to make worse; to lessen in quantity, value, or excellence.

To change any such law, must needs, with the common sort, impair and weaken the force of those grounds whereby all laws are made effectual.

Objects divine
Must needs impair, and weary human sense.

Must needs impair, and weary human sense.

Must needs impair, and weary human sense.

Must needs impair, and weary human sense.

Must needs impair, and weary human sense.

IMP

That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt the approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years. Pope.

TO IMPAIR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair, quoth he; but reason can repair. Fairy Queen.

IMPAIR. n. f. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease. Not used.

A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preserved by fire than dust or steel. Brown.

IMPAIRMENT. n. f. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMPAIRABLE. adj. [impairable, French; in and payable.] Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impairable powder, when poured out, it will emulsiate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.

TO IMPARADISE. v. a. [imparadise, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadised neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did overcloud it. Shelley.

All my souls be Imparadised in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Donne.
Thus these two,
Imparadised in one another's arms,
The happier I den, wish enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

IMPARITY. n. f. [imparitas, impar, Lat.] 1. Inequality; disproportion.

Some bodies are hard, some soft—the hardness is caused chiefly by the junction of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Baron.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.

What verity is there in that moral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd, and so by parity or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO IMPARK. v. a. [in and park.] To enclose with a park; to sever from a common.

TO IMPART. v. a. [impartior, Latin.]

1. To grant; to give.

High state and honours to others impart.
But give me your heart. Dryden.

2. To make known; to show by words or tokens.

Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins. Shelley. Merchant of Venice.

Avon confession the revealing is for the case of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their words. Bacon.

Thou to me thy thoughts
Wilt wot, I wote to thee was wot't' impart. Milton.

3. To communicate; to grant as to a partaker.

I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee true,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Milton.

IMP

IMPARTIAL. adj. [impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons: an impartial judge; an impartial sentence.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Love is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden.

IMPARTIALITY. n. f. [impartialité, Fr. from impartial.] Equitableness; justice; indifference.

A pious and well-disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success into our inquiries into truth; it being far more possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is full glancing upon something beside it. South.

IMPARTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiased judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. South.

IMPARTIBLE. adj. [impartible, French; from impart.] Communicable; that may be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The fine body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy. Dugdale.

IMPASSABLE. adj. [in and payable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impassable.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Rauwolf.

Impassable, impassable; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world. Milton.

When Alexander would have passed the Gauges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy deserts. Temple.

IMPASSIBILITY. n. f. [impassibilité, Fr. from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand. Dryden.

IMPASSIBLE. adj. [impassible, French; in and passio, Latin.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

If the upper soul check what is contented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress in a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour. Hannont.

Secure of death, I should condemn thy dart,
Though naked, and impassible depart. Dryden.

IMPASSIBleness. n. f. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameful a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensualities of this world, and yet cry out for the impassibleness of the next? Decay of Piety.

IMPASSIONED. adj. [in and passion.] Disordered by passion.

So, standing, moving, or to height upgrown,
The tempter, all impassioned, thus began. Milton.

IMPASSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.

IMP

She told him what those empty phantoms were Forms without bodies, and impassive air. Dryden.
Fule suns, unfelt at distance, roll away,
And on th' impassive ice the lightning's play. Pope.

IMPA'STED. adj. [in and passive.] Concrete as into paste. Not in use.

Horribly trait
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, &c.
Bak'd and impassed with the parching fires. Shelley.

IMPA'TIENCE. n. f. [impatience, French; impatiens, Latin.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wits has given way to impatience. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The experiment I resolved to make was, thought, and not rashness or impatience. Temple.

2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion.

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.

IMPA'TIENT. adj. [impatiens, French; impatiens, Latin.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear with of.

Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy than excess of praise. Pope.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.

The tortur'd savage turns around,
And dungs about his form, impatient of the wound. Dryden.

3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion; with at before the occasion with of impatience is referred to the thing, with at to the person.

To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must be slain, means that the person was not to be slain. Taylor's Rule of Law.

4. Hot; hasty.

The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that is before him. Temple's Speech.

5. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay; with for before the thing desired.

The mighty Caesar wants his vital hour;
Impatient for the world, and his great power. Dryden.

On the way prepared the vessel to land,
Th' impatient manner thy speed demands. Dryden.

IMPA'TIENTLY. adv. [from impatient.]

1. With rage, under uneasiness.

2. Passionately; ardently.

He considered one thing to impatiently that he would not admit any thing else to be considered. Temple.

3. Eagerly; with great desire.

TO IMPATRONIZE. v. a. [impatronize, Fr. in and patron.] To gain to oneself the power of any feigning. The word is not usual.

The ambition of the French king was to impatronize himself of the dutchy. Bacon.

TO IMPAWN. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawned some surety for a time to come. Shelley.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall invite us to;
Therefore take heed how you impawn a person. Shelley.

How you awake our sleeping sword of war,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shelley.

TO IMPEACH. v. a. [empêcher, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to impede. The word is little in use.

Each door he opened without any breach;
there was no bar to stop, no foe him to impeach.

His sons did impeach his journey to the Holy land, and vexed him all the days of his life.

If they will impeach the purposes of an Army, such they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy.

A delusion on my throat impeached my utterance.

To accuse by publick authority.

They were both impeached by a house of commons.

Great diffentions were kindled between the bishops and commons on account of Caristimus, who the latter had impeached.

EACH, n. f. [from the verb.] Impeachment; let; impediment.

Why, what an intricate impeach is this!
here you hous'd him, here he would have been;

he were mad, he would not plead so coldly.

ACHABLE, adj. [from impeach.] Ac-cusable; chargeable.

Had God omitted by positive laws to give light to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been impeachable.

EACHER, n. f. [from impeach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.

Many of our fiercest impeachers would leave delinquent to the mercurial indulgence of a woman.

EACHMENT, n. f. [from impeach.]
Impedance; let; impediment; obstruction. Not in use.

Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest prejudice to the good government thereof.

Tell the king I do not seek him now;

it could be willing to march on to Calais, without impeachment.

Neither is this accession of necessity any impediment to christian liberty, or entraining of our consciences.

Publick accusation; charge preferred.

The king, provok'd to it by the queen,

resolv'd impeachments to imprison him.

The lord Somers, though his accusers would silly have dropped their impeachment, was insist with them for the prosecution.

The consequences of Caristimus' impeachment had like to have been fatal to their state.

IMPEARL, v. a. [in and pearl.]

To form in resemblance of pearls.

Immeasurable as the stars of night,

flashes of morning, dewdrops, which the sun beats on every leaf, and every flower.

To decorate as with pearls.

The dews of the morning impart every thorn, ad scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth.

IMPECCABILITY, n. f. [impeccabilite, Fr.
from impeccabile.] Exemption from sin;

exemption from failure.

Impassibility and impeccability are two of his attributes.

IMPECCABLE, adj. [impeccable, Fr. in and pecco, Lat.] Exempt from possibility of sin.

That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that is a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the menus of consecrating every sin of his.

IMPEDE, v. a. [impedio, Lat.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede his passage.

The way is open, and no stop to force
The stars return, or to impede their course.

IMPEDEMENT, n. f. [impedimentum, Lat.]
Hinderance; let; obstruction; opposition.

The minds of heads grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let.

But for my tears,

The most impediments unto my speech

I had foretold this dear and deep rebuke.

May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shews,

Decay of impediment.

They bring one that was dead, and had an impediment in his speech.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom, and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly content to loose his life with torments.

Free from the impediments of light and noise,

Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs.

To IMPEL, v. a. [impello, Latin.] To drive on toward a point; to urge forward; to press on.

So Mirah's mind, impell'd on either side,

Takes every bent, but can it long abide

The surge impell'd on one a craggy coast.

Proportion gales

Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails.

A mightier power the strong direction sends,

And fatal men impels to fatal ends;

This drives them constant to a certain coast.

IMPELLENT, n. f. [impellens, Lat.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of pulsages, by more blind impellents and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture.

To IMPEND, v. n. [impendo, Latin.]

1. To hang over.

Detraction sure o'er all your heads impends;

Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends.

2. To be at hand; to press nearly. It is used in an ill sense.

It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins,

and our lively sense of God's impending wrath.

No story I unfold of publick woes,

Nor bear advice of any long foes.

IMPENDENT, adj. [impendens, Lat.] Imminent; hanging over; pressing closely.

In an ill sense.

If the evil feared or impendent be a greater sensible evil than the good, it over-rides the appetite to acceleration.

Dreadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain

Place Ormond's duke: impendent in the air

Let his keen sabre, comet-like, appear.

IMPENDENCE, n. f. [from impendent.]

The state of hanging over; near approach.

Good sometimes is not safe to be attempted,
by reason of the impendence of a greater sensible evil.

IMPENETRABILITY, n. f. [impenetrabilité,
Fr. from impenetrable.]

1. Quality of not being pierceable, or permeable.

All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard, or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal impenetrability; besides a large experience, without an experimental exception.

2. Implexibility of intellectual impression.

IMPENETRABLE, adj. [impenetrable,
Fr. impenetrabilite, Lat.]

1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.

With burning cold, and forming heat,

The cyclops did then strokes repeat,

Before the impenetrable flux was wrought.

2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,

Impenetrable to the stars or sun.

The mind troglas itself with any thing reflected on in gross things, thus offered to the mind, easy the flow of nothing but difficulty in them,
and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity.

3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.

4. Not to be affected; not to be moved.

It is the most impenetrable ear

That ever kept with men.

Let him alone;

I'll follow him no more with booties prayers.

Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it. they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but impenetrable by a sermon of the gospel.

IMPENEURABLE, adv. [from impenetrable.] With hardness to a degree measurable of impression.

Blunt the sense, and fit it for a skull

Of solid proof, impenetrably dull.

IMPLENITUDE, n. f. [impenitence, Fr.

IMPLENITUDE, n. f. [impenitence, Fr. in and penitence.] Obduracy; want of remorse for crimes;
final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, till at last he becomes hardened without remorse.

IMPESENT, adj. [impenitent, Fr. in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our Lord in anger hath granted some impenitent men's request, as, on the other side, the apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted.

They dy'd

Impenitent, and left a trace behind

Like to themselves.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once admitted to as true,
'tis impossible but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have dislikes to the other.

IMPESENTLY, adv. [from impenitent.]

Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mix'd with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, to they be not wilfully, and impenitently lived and died in.

What crowds of these impenitently bold,

In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,

Still run on poets!

IMPEPNOUS, adj. [in and penna, Lat.]

Wanting wings. This word is convenient, but, I think, not used.

IMP

It is generally received as an axiom, that no wings, and is reckoned amongst unpoetical insects; but he that shall, with a needle, put aside the short and theathy cuts on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies.

IMPERATE. adj. [imperatus, Lat.] Done with consciousness; done by direction of the mind.

The chief internal acts of any habit may be quick and vigorous, when the external imperate acts of the same habit utterly cease.

Those natural and involuntary actions are not done by deliberation, yet they are done by the energy of the soul and instrumentality of the spirits, as well as those imperate acts, wherein we see the empire of the soul.

IMPERATIVE. adj. [imperativus, Fr. imperativus, Lat.] Commanding; expressive of command.

The verb is formed in a different manner, to signify the intention of commanding, forbidding, allowing, disallowing, entreating, which likewise, from the principal use of it, is called the imperative mood.

IMPERATIVELY. adv. In a commanding style; authoritatively.

IMPERCEPTIBLE. adj. [imperceptible, Fr. in and perceptible.] Not to be discovered; not to be perceived; small; subtle; quick or slow, so as to elude observation.

Some things are in their nature imperceptible by our sense; yes, and the more refined parts of material existence, which, by reason of their subtilty, escape our perception.

In the sudden changes of his subject with almost imperceptible connections, the Theban poet is his matter.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling flames, or the gliding of a snake upon the ground: they must be almost imperceptible to the touch, and even.

The alterations in the globe are very flight, and almost imperceptible, and such as tend to the benefit of the earth.

IMPERCEPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from imperceptible.] The quality of eluding observation.

Many excellent things there are in nature, which, by reason of their subtilty, and imperceptibility to us, are not so much as when any of our faculties to apprehend.

IMPERCEPTIBLY. adv. [from imperceptible.] In a manner not to be perceived.

Upon reading of a tale we are made to believe we advise ourselves: the moral insinuates itself imperceptibly, we are taught by surprise, and become wiser and better unawares.

IMPERFECT. adj. [imperfectus, Fr. imperfectus, Lat.]

1. Not complete; not absolutely finished; defective. Cited either of persons or things.

Something he left imperfect in the state, which, since his coming forth, is thought of, which brought the kingdom to such fear and danger.

That his return was most required. Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the sanction of reason.

The middle action, which produceth imperfect bodies, is fitly call'd, by some of the ancients, iniquation or incoaction, which is a kind of putrefaction.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks.

Divers things we agree to be knowledg, which yet are so unclay to be satisfactorily understand by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure.

A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all cure.

The full-born founns upon the palate hang, And dy'd imperfect on the falling tongue.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men.

2. Frail; not completely good: as, our best worship is imperfect.

IMPERFECTION. n. f. [imperfectio, Fr. from imperfect.] Defect; failure; fault, whether physical or moral: whether of persons or things.

Laws, as all other things human, are many times full of imperfection, and that which is imposed behoveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious.

The duke had taken to wife Anne Stanhope, a woman for many imperfections intolerable, but for pride monstrous.

Imperfections would not be half so much taken notice of, if vanity did not make proclamation of them.

The world is more apt to censure than applaud, and himself fuller of imperfections than virtues.

There are rather to be imputed to the impurity of the age than to any imperfection in that divine poet.

IMPERFECTLY. adv. [from imperfect.] Not completely; not fully; not without failure.

Should sinking nations summon you away, Min's love might pity you they; Imperfectly the many vows are paid, Which for your safety to the gods were made.

Those would hardly understand language or reason to any tolerable degree; but only a little and imperfectly about things familiar.

IMPERFORABLE. adj. [in and perforo, Lat.] Not to be bored through.

IMPERFORATE. adj. [in and perforatus, Lat.] Not pierced through; without a hole.

Sometimes children are born imperforate, in which case a small puncture, dressed with a treat, effects the cure.

IMPERIAL. adj. [imperial, French; imperialis, Latin.]

1. Royal; pollking royalty.

At a fair vessel, thronged in the west; Put I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft Quenched in the chaste beams of the wat'ry moon.

And the imperial vot'ers passed on In madd'ning meditation, hazy free.

2. Betokening royalty; marking sovereignty.

My due from thee is this imperial crown, Which, as immediate from thy place and blood, Derives title to me.

3. Belonging to an emperour or monarch; regal; royal; monarchical.

The main body of the marching foe As, with the imperial palace is design'd, You that are a foreign prince, ally Imperial pow'r with your paternal sway.

To tame the proud, the fester'd slave to free, These are imperial arts, and worthy thee.

IMPERIALIST. n. f. [from imperial.] One that belongs to an emperour.

The imperialists imputed the cause of the shameful flight unto the Venetians.

IMP

Names gain'd by conquest in the Gallic war?

Why lays he claim to Hercules his strain,
Yet dares be base, effeminate, and vain? Dryden.

TO IMPUGN. v. a. [from impugnare, French; impugno, Latin.] To attack; to assault by law or argument.

Of a strange nature is the suit you follow;
Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law Cannot impugn you. Shakspeare.

I cannot think myself engaged to discourse of lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness; and that not only in matters of moment and business, but also of recreation, which is impugned by some, though better defended by others. South.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw one of these in his time; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peachment.

IMPUGNER. n. f. [from impugnare.] One that attacks or invades.

IMPUISSANCE. n. f. [French.] Impotence; inability; weakness; feebleness.

As he would not trust Ferdinand and Maximilian for supports of war, so the impuissance of the one, and the double proceeding of the other, lay far for him for occasions to accept of peace. Bacon's Henry VII.

IMPULSE. n. f. [from impulsus, Latin.]

1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another.

If these little impulses set the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeness and height of that shall not at all be prejudiced by the smallness of its occasion. South.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifestly by impulse. Locke.

Bodies, from the impulse of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their surfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Chenevix.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea impressed.

Meantime, by Jove's impulse, Metastasis arm'd, Succeeded Turanus. Dryden.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dryden.

Moses saw the bush burn without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hostile impression.

Like two great rocks against the raging tide, Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide, Sustain the impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPULSION. n. f. [impulsion, French; impulsus, Latin.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound, for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulse of the air. Bacon's Natural History.

To the impulse there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

But thou dost plead
Divine impulse, prompting how thou might'st Find some occasion to intert our toes. Milton.

IMPULSIVE. adj. [impulsif, French; from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience:
But those being plac'd in a lower sphere,
His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion Against their proper course. Denham's Sophy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free. South.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they Do some impulsive force obey,
And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPUNITY. n. f. [impunité, French; impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.

In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Darwin.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury.

IMPURE. adj. [impur, French; impurus, Latin.]

1. Defiled with guilt; unholy: of men.

No more can impure man retain and move
In that pure region of a worthy love,
Than earthly substance can unfur'd aspire,
And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

2. Contrary to sanctity; unhallowed; unholy: of things.

Hypocrites austere talk,
Condemning as impure what God has made Pure, and commands to love, leaves free to all. Milton.

3. Unchaste.

If black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your impulsion,
Your mere enforcement shall acquitance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakespeare.

One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit, than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.

4. Feculent; foul with extraneous mixtures; droffy.

IMPURELY. adv. [from impure.] With impurity.

IMPURENESS. n. f. [impureté, French; IMPURITY. n. f. [impuritas, Latin; from impure.]

1. Want of sanctity; want of holiness.

2. Act of unchastity.

Foul impurities reigned among the monkish clergy. Atterbury.

TO IMPURPLE. v. a. [empourprier, Fr. from purple.] To make red; to colour as with purple.

Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone, Impurpled with celestial roses, smil'd. Milton.

IMPURABLE. adj. [from impute.]

1. Chargeable upon any one; that of which one may be accused.

That first sort of foolishness is imputable to them. South.

2. Accusable; chargeable with a fault. Not proper.

If the wife departs from her husband, through any default of his, as on the account of cruelty, then he shall be compelled to allow her alimony, for the law deems her to be a dutiful wife as long as the fault lies at his door, and she is in no wise imputable. Argyle.

IMPUTABLENESS. n. f. [from imputable.]

The quality of being imputable.

'Tis necessary to the imputableness of an action, that it be avoidable. Norris.

IMPUTATION. n. f. [imputation, French; from impute.]

1. Attribution of any thing: generally of ill.

Trust to me, Ulysses;
Our imputation shall be oddly paid
In this wild action. Shallip, Troilus and Cressida.

If a son that is sent by his father about merchandise, do fall into some lewd action, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shakespeare.

To his intellectual and volitions in the infinite essence, as hypothesis, is allowable; but a rigorous imputation is derogatory to him, and arrogant in us. Glanville's Scrypsis.

I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of felicity on that subject. Dryden.

2. Sometimes of good.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would honour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.

3. Censure; reproach.

Whatever happens they also the least feel that censure of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker.

Let us be careful to guard ourselves against the groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Suff.

4. Hint; slight notice.

Anthony is a good man.
— Have you heard any imputation to the contrary? Shakespeare.

— No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shakespeare.

IMPUTATIVE. adj. [from impute.] That may impute.

TO IMPUTE. v. a. [imputer, French; impute, Latin.]

1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Donne.
Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees (scarce to be perceived); for what whosoever is new and unlooked for, commends some, and inspires others, and he that is holpen takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputes it to the author. Bacon's Essay.

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Temple.

Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryden.
This obscenity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of style. Locke.

I have read a book imputed to Lord Balthazar called a dissertation on parties. Swift.

2. To reckon to one what does not properly belong to him.

Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds. Milton.

IMPUTE. n. f. [from impute.] He that imputes.

1s. prep. [in, Latin.]

1. Noting the place where any thing is present; not without.

In school of love are all things taught we see
There learn'd this maid of arms the metal gate. Farjeon.

In this place here not sufficient strong
To guard us in? Donne's Civil War.

2. Noting the state or thing present at any time.

The other is only by error and misconception named the ordinance of Jesus Christ: no proof is yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.

Let one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes. Shakespeare.

Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are at arms. Shakespeare.

Danger before, and in, and after the act,
You needs must grant is great. Dryden.

However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities, for the present there, being to be determined by the preponderancy, after a due weighing of all the points on both sides, nothing is to usfit to aid the mind in that as syllogism. Locke.

God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent. Southey.

None was so little in their friendship, as much in that of those whom they had abused. Donne.

3. Noting the time.

When we would consider eternity a part, and what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds the ideas of years or ages past? Locke.

4. Noting power.

To feed men's souls, quoth he, is not in man. Hubbard's Tale.

5. Noting proportion.

Let alms in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and let that rate be proclaimed to be free and current. Bacon.

I cannot but lament the common course, which, at least, nine in ten of those who enter into the ministry are obliged to enter. Swift.

6. According to.

In all likelihood I brought all my limbs out of the bed, which, 'tis probable, he has not done of the breach. Collier.

7. Concerning.

I only consider what he, who is allowed to have carried this argument farthest, has said just. Locke.

8. For the sake. A solemn phrase.

Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat does this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Shakespeare.

In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him our city. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Now, in the name of honour, sir, I beg you
That I may see your father's death revenged.
Dryden.

9. Noting cause.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shak.

10. In that. Because.

Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wife men, and christian men, some things; some things in that they are reminded, and blinded with error. Hooker.

He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into, in that it is a thing of his own search. Shakespeare.

11. In as much. Since; seeing that.

Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would.
Hooker.

In. adv.

1. Within some place; not out.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falseness as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the fastidest bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South.

I fear me, you'll be in 'till then. Shakespeare.

2. Engaged to any affair.

We know the worst can come; 'tis thought upon:

We cannot shift being in, we must go on. Dan.
These pragmatists slice value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estrange.

3. Placed in some state.

Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out.
Shakespeare.

Must never patriot then decumb at gun,
Unless, good man, he has been fairly in. Pope.

4. Noting immediate entrance.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table,
serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.
Shakespeare.

He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?
—Let me see't; I'll in, I'll in: follow your friend's advice.

I'll in. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. Into any place.

Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in.
Dryden.

Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm?
Cahner.

In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve, larger than could be introduced in at those holes. Woodward.

6. Close; home.

The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Trotter.

7. In has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin; so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as illative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.

INABILITY. n. f. [in and ability.] Im-puissance; impotence; want of power.

If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delighting to insure themselves

Vol. I.

with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and through experience the more wisdom. Hooker.

Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended; and what plea can be offered to divine justice to prevent condemnation? Rogers.

INCONTINENCE. n. f. [in and abstinence.]

Intemperance; want of power to abstain; prevalence of appetite.

Peonies drive, of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know What misery the incontinence of Love
Still brings on man. Milton.

INACCESSIBLE. adj. [inaccessibile, French;

in and accessible.] Not to be reached;
not to be approached.

Whatever you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of unlovely boughs,
Loiter and neglect the creeping hours of time.
Shakespeare.

Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower rank, are inaccessible to us. Hale.

Here shall we see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtle for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distant view of. Ray.

This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy
her. Droden.

INACCURACY. n. f. [from inaccurate.]

Want of exactness.

INACCURATE. adj. [in and accurate.]

Not exact; not accurate. It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.

INACTION. n. f. [inaction, French; in and action.] Cessation from labour; forbearance of labour.

The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present: I lie in a retreating kind of inaction. Pope.

INACTIVE. adj. [in and active.] Not busy; not diligent; idle; indolent; sluggish.

INACTIVELY. adv. [from inactive.] Idly;

without labour; without motion; sluggishly.

In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactive-ly loiters it away, when left to his own inclination.
Locke.

INACTIVITY. n. f. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.

A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers.

Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,
Is inactivity at best. Saunders.

INADEQUATE. adj. [in and adequatus,

Latin.] Not equal to the purpose;
defective; falling below the due proportion.

Remorse for vice
Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,
What farther means can reason now direct?
Dryden.

Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Locke.

INADEQUATELY. adv. [from inadequate.]

Defectively; not completely.

These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately. Boyle.

INADVERTENCE. n. f. [inadvertence,

French; from in-advertent.]

1. Carelessness; negligence; inattention.

There is a difference between them, as between inadvertency and deliberation, between surprise and set purpose. South.

From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present that they mind nothing else. L'Estrange.

2. Act or effect of negligence.

Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their first rise only from some inadvertency or indiscretion. Government of the Tongue.

The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and inadvertencies, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author, which are scrupulously exact. Addison.

INADVERTENT. adj. [in and advertens,

Latin.] Negligent; careless.

INADVERTENTLY. adv. [from inadvertent.]
Carelessly; negligently.

Anon mentions Telegonus as the son of Greece and Ulysses, who afterwards slew his father with the bone of a fish made recently.
Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground. Campbell.

INALIENABLE. adj. [in and alienable.]

That cannot be alienated, or granted to another.

INALIMENTAL. adj. [in and alimental.]

Affording no nourishment.

Dukerian imports a degree of nourishment; and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit for making new victual. Lucan.

INAMISSABLE. adj. [inamissible, French;

in and amissum, Latin.] Not to be lost.

These advantages are inamissible. Ammon.

INANE. adj. [inans, Latin.] Empty; void. It is used licentiously for a substantive.

We sometimes speak of place in the great inane, beyond the confines of the world. Locke.

TO INANIMATE. v. a. [in and animo,

Latin.] To animate; to quicken. Not in use.

There is a kind of world remaining still,
Though the which did animate and fill
The world be gone; yet in this last long night
Her ghost doth walk, that is, a glimmering light Doune.

INANIMATE. } adj. [inanimatus, Latin;

INANIMATE. } inanime, French.] Void of life; without animation.

The spirits of animate bodies are all in some degree kindled; but inanimate bodies have spirits no whit inflamed. Bacon.

The golden goddess, present at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' animated fair,
And gave the sign of granting. Dryden.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves. Pentecost.

Both require the constant influence of a principle different from that which governs the inanimate part of the universe. Chegar.

From roots when Verrio's colours fall,
And leave inanimate the naked wall,
Still in thy song should vanquish'd France appear. Pope.

INANITION. n. f. [inanition, French;

inanis, Latin.] Emptiness of body;
want of fulness in the vessels of the animal.

Weakness which attends fevers proceeds from too great fulness in the beginning, and too great inanition in the latter end of the disease. Arbuth.

INANITY. n. f. [from inanis, Latin.]

Emptiness; void space.

This opinion excludes all such inanity, and admits no vacuities but so little ones as no body

INAPPLICATION. n. f. [inapplication, Fr. in and application.] Indolence; negligence.

INAPURABLE. adj. [in and aro, Latin.] Not capable of tillage. Dick.

To INARCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined, take the branch you would march, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the end and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united, and the graft may then be cut from the mother tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmynes, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INARTICULATE. adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness, like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters. Hallam.

By the harmony of words we elevate the mind to a sense of devotion; as our solemn music, which is inarticulate poetry, doth in churches. Dryden.

INARTICULATELY. adv. [from inarticulate.] Not distinctly.

Shakespeare.

The reception of one is as different from the mission of the other, as when the earth falls in under the incisions of the plough, and when apes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the reflections of a shower.

South.

A small incision knife is more handy than a saw for opening the bag.

Shoep's Surgery

Division of viscidities by medicines.
Absterion is a scouring off, or incision of viscidities, and making them fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as in uterine cancer, which scours the lining.

Bacon

[SIVE. adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, itement; incentive; motive; impulse;

e act of inciting; the power of initing.

Dr. Ridley defines magnetic attraction to be natural incitation and disposition conforming o contiguity, an union of one magnetic body unto another.

Brown's Vulgar Errors

The multitude of objects do proportionably lly both the possibilities and incitations.

Government of the Tongue

The mind gives not only licence, but incition to the other passions to act with the utmost retentivity.

Deacy of Patry

[NCITE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, ] To stir up; to push forward in purpose; to animate; to spur; to go on.

How many now in health drop their blood, in approbation
what your reverence shall incite us to? Shaksp.
No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
t love, dear love, and our aged father's right.

Shakespeare.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in r, set before him the greatness of the Romans, uparing it to a fire, that took and spread from glory to kingdom.

Bacon

Nature and common reason, in all difficulties, ere prudence or courage are required, do ra-er incite us to fly for assistance to a single peron than a multitude.

Swift

[TEMENT. n. f. [from incite.] Move; incentive; impulse; inciting cause.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, ving such incitements to make him desirous of l furtherances unto his cause, could espy in l whole Scripture of God nothing which might e least a probable opinion of likehod, that divine authority was the true way clinable.

Hooker

Harlib seems sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great ood to this island.

Milton

If thou must reform the stubborn times, om the long records of a distant age rive incitements to renew thy rage.

Pope

[VIL. adj. [incivil, French.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVILITY. n. f. [incivilité, French;
in and civility.]

1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility.

Tillotson

Spenser

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole Scripture nothing which might bive a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.

Hooker

The gall and bitterness of certain men writings, who tyred him hitherto, made him, for then sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured.

Hooker

Demer,
Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye.

Milton

2. Having a tendency.
It such a craft naturally fell, then it was most likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the fall; but it the craft was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally.

Bentley

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which show the natural inclination of the soil leans that way.

Addison

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted when he found that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage.

Clarendon

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law?

South

4. Love; affection; regard. In this sense it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, breau's

Boyle.

INCONSTANCY. n. f. [inconstantia, Lat. inconstance, Fr. from inconstant.]

1. Unsteadiness; want of steady adherence; mutability of temper or affection.

I have suffered more for their fakes, more than the villainous inconstancy of man is able to bear.

Shakespeare.

Be made the mark
For all the people's hate, the princess' curses,
And his son's rage, or the old king's inconstancy.

Denham.

In resolution on the schemes of life which offer to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness.

Addison's Spectator.

2. Diversity; dissimilitude.

As much inconstancy and confusion is there in their mixtures or combinations; for it is rare to find any of them pure and unmixed.

Woodward.

INCONSTANT. adj. [inconstant, Fr. inconstants, Lat.]

1. Not firm in resolution; not steady in affection; various of inclination; wanting perseverance: of persons.

He is so naturally inconstant, that I marvel his soul finds not some way to kill his body.

Sidney.

2. Changeable; mutable; variable: of things.

O wear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

Shakespeare.

INCONSUMABLE. adj. [in and consume.] Not to be wasted.

By art were weaved napkins, shirts, and coats, inconsumable by fire, and wherein they burnt the bodies of kings.

Brown.

INCONSUMPTIBLE. adj. [in and consumptus, Latin.] Not to be spent; not to be brought to an end; not to be destroyed by fire. This seems a more elegant word than inconsumable.

Before I give any answer to this objection of pretended inconsumptible lights, I would gladly see the effect undoubtedly proved.

Dugly.

INCONTESTABLE. adj. [incontestable, Fr. in and contest.] Not to be disputed; not admitting debate; incontrovertible.

Our own being furnishes us with an evident and incontestable proof of a Deity; and I believe no body can avoid the cogency of it, who will carefully attend to it.

Locke.

INCONTESTABLY. adv. [from incontestable.] Indisputably; incontrovertibly.

INCONTIGUOUS. adj. [in and contiguous.]

Inability to refrain the appetites; unchastity.

The cognizance of her incontinency is this; the hath bought the name of whore thus dearly.

Shakespeare.

But beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree,
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard

Of dragon-watch with unincubated eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit
From the rash hand of bold incontinence.

Milton.

This is my defence;
I pleas'd myself, I thinn'd incontinence,
And urg'd by strong desires, indulg'd my sense.

Dryden.

The words fine & refine Dianam agree better with Livia, who had the name of chastity, than with either of the Julias, who were both noted of incontinency.

Dryden.

INCONTINENT. adj. [incontinens, Lat. in and continent.]

1. Unchaste; indulging unlawful pleasure.

In these degrees in have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb mountaint, or else be incontinent before marriage.

 How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

INDEPENDENCE. } n. f. [independance, Fr.
INDEPENDENCY. } in and dependence.

Freedom; exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.

Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independence on matter. Addison.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
 My bread and independency,
 So bought an annual rent or two,
 And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

INDEPENDENT. adj. [independant, French; in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from, before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Goul is a protestant republic, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cautious. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superiour cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance: these alone do very easily guide us to the wife Author of all things. Bentley.

INDEPENDENT. n. f. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superiour authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sunderfon.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPENDENTLY. adv. [from independent.]

Without reference to other things.
 Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESTRUCT. n. f. [in and desert] Want of merit. This is an useful word, but not much received.

Those who were once looked on as his equals are apt to think the same of his merit a reflection on their own indestits. Addison.

1. Declaration; proclamation.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bacon.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterward, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 311, by which an entire freedom was given to christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A.D. 313, Jan. 1.

INDIFFERENCE. n. f. [indifference, Fr. indifférence, Lat.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifference by putting in those that are sitting on both sides.

Façon's Essays.

By an equal indifference for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true.

Locke.

A perfect indifference in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifference to act, or not to act, till determined by the will.

Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expostors either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifference look into the notes of all commentators.

Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifference and judgment, and thou canst not but greatly commend it.

Whitgift.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance.

Addison.

A place which we must pass through not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy.

Rogers.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity tell?

Swift.

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifference at he would a piece of public news.

Swift.

The people of England should be frightened with the French king and the pretender once a year, the want of observing this necessary precept has produced great indifference in the vulgar.

Arbutnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves; their indifference is removed if we take away our own liberty.

Hooker.

INDIFFERENT. adj. [indifferent, Fr. indifférent, Lat.]

1. Neutral; not determined on either side.

Doth his may fly
Incline to us or no?

—He seems indifferent.

Shakespeare.

Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth.

Let guilt or fear
Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them.

Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die.

Addison.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.

One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else.

It was a law of Solon, that any person who in the civil commotions of the republic, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment.

Addison's Freeholder.

But how indifferent soever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent.

Ray.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.

The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary.

Hooker.

Customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms, became exceedingly evil in this realm, by reason of the inconvenience which followed thereupon.

Davies.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet, the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not to indifferent.

INE

TO INEBRIATE. v. n. To grow drunk; to be intoxicated.

At Constantinople, fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand. Bacon.

INEBRATION. n. f. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue, experience will make us grant; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brown.

INEFFABILITY. n. f. [from ineffable.] Unfathomableness.

INEFFABLE. adj. [ineffable, Fr. ineffabilis, Lat.] Unspeakable; unutterable; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the Son, with calm aspect, and clear, Lightning divine, ineffable, serene! Made answer. Milton.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.

INEFFABLY. adv. [from ineffable.] In a manner not to be expressed.

He all his father full express'd, Ineffably into his face receiv'd. Milton.

INEFFECTIVE. adj. [ineffectif, Fr. in and effective.] That can produce no effect; unactive; inefficient; useless.

As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffectual letter. Taylor.

He that assures himself he never errs, will always err; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffectual. Glanville.

INEFFECTUAL. adj. [in and effectual.] Unable to produce its proper effect; weak; wanting power.

The public reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil; the bare reading even of scriptures themselves they dislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good. Peacock.

The death of Patroclus, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Peacock.

INEFFECTUALLY. adv. [from ineffectual.] Without effect.

INEFFECTUALNESS. n. f. [from ineffectual.] Inefficiency; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the effectualness of some men's devotion, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Wake.

INEFFECTUOUS. adj. [ineffectue, Fr. in and effectus, Lat.] Unable to produce effects; weak; feeble. Ineffectual rather denotes an actual failure; and ineffectuous, an habitual impotence to any effect.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use, multiply and render ineffectuous this useful remedy? Locke.

INEFFECTUOUSLY. adv. [in and effectus, Lat.] Want of power; want of effect.

INELEGANCE. n. f. [from inelegant.] Absence of beauty; want of elegance.

INELEGANT. adj. [inelegans, Lat.]

1. Not becoming; not beautiful: opposite to delegant.

What order, to contriv'd as not to mix Tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change. Milton.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed so inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Wanting ornament of language.

Modern critics, having never read Homer but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. Broom.

INELOQUENT. adj. [in and eloquens, Lat.] Not persuasive; not oratorical: opposite to eloquent.

INEPT. adj. [ineptus, Lat.]

1. Trifling; foolish.

The works of nature, being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge. More.

After their various unsuccessful ways, Their fruitless labour, and inept essays, No cause of these appearances they'll find, But power exerted by th' eternal mind. Blackmore.

2. Unfit for any purpose; useless.

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

INEPTLY. adv. [ineptus, Lat.] Triflingly; foolishly; unfitly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly. More.

All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly. Glanville.

INEPTITUDE. n. f. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of the axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or reticency to the rotation of the cylinder. Wickins.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stupidity of the matter being ever able to hinder him. Ray.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great laxity, and ineptitude to motion from too great tension. Arbuthnot.

INEQUALITY. n. f. [inegalité, Fr. from inequalis, and in and equalis, Lat.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is too great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison.

The glass seemed well wrought; yet when it was quicksilvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, not in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom. Bentley.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he propoed in the expectation. South.

4. Change of state; unlikeness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others; and inequality of air is ever a enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.

It is so small inequality between man and man make in them modesty a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors and inferiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hooker.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness and inerrability as to exclude myself from judging. King Charles.

INERRABLE. adj. [in and err.] Exempt from error.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any credible ground to build it on. Hammond.

INERRABLENESS. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed and enclosed by the Romish church, without any credible ground to build it on. Hammond.

INERRABLY. adv. [from inerrable.] With security from error; infallibly.

INERRINGLY. adv. [in and erring.] Without error; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers painters at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself to inerringly according to the idea of its kind. Glanville.

INERT. adj. [iners, Latin.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.

Body alone, inert and brute, you'll find; The cause of all things is by you assign'd. Blackmore.

Informers of the planetary train! Without whole quickening glance their emulous orbs Were brute unliving mass, inert and dead. Thomson.

INERTLY. adv. [from inert.] Sluggishly; dully.

Ye powers, Suspend a while your force inertly strong. Durand.

INESCAUTION. n. f. [in and esca, Latin.] The act of baiting.

INESTIMABLE. adj. [inestimable, French; inestimabilis, Latin.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks, A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon; Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearls, Inestimable houses, unvalued jewels. Shakespeare.

The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king, to suck out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality. Ablett.

There we shall see a sight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, of whom the scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does so highly deserve of us upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his inestimable benefits. Bayly.

And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize, On that rapacious hand for ever blaze! Pope.

INEVIDENT. adj. [inevident, Fr. in and evident.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, and a stable ass't into that which is evident, upon authority of the divine revelation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INEVITABILITY. n. f. [from inevitable.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.

By liberty, I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessitation, that is, an universal immunity from all inevitability and determination to one. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INEVITABLE. adj. [inevitable, Fr. inevitable, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.

I had a pass with him: he gives me the stuck in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Fate inevitable

Subdues us.
Since my inevitable death you know,
You fairly unavailing pity throw.
Druiden.

EVITABLY. adv. [from inevitable.]
Without possibility of escape.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.
Milton.

How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a sigh!

If they look no further than the next line, it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point.
Dryden.

Indignations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole.
Harvey.

If our seats of hearing were exalted we should have no quiet or sleep in the silent night, and we must inevitably be stricken dead or dead with a clap of thunder.
Leitling.

EXCUSABLE. adj. [inexcusable, Fr. inexcusable, Lat. in and excusable.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.

It is a temerity, and a folly inexcusable, to deber up ourselves needlessly into another's power.
L'Estrange.

As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account.
Addison.

Such a favour could only render them more obdurate and more inexcusable: it would enhance their guilt.
Atterbury.

If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive.
Swift.

A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as,
from the cradle the sex is warned against the de-lusions of men.
Clarke.

EXCUSABLENESS. n. f. [from inexcusable.]
Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.

Their inexcusableness is stated upon the supposition that they knew God, but did not glorify in him.
South.

EXCUSABLY. adv. [from inexcusable.]
To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.

It will inevitably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention.
Brown.

EVAPORABLE. adj. [in and exhale.]
That cannot evaporate.

A new laid egg will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the undissoluble parts into cohesiveness.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXHAUSTED. adj. [in and exhausted.]
Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

So wert thou born into a tuncful strain,
An early, rich, and unexhausted vein.
Druiden.

EXHAUSTIBLE. adj. [in and exhaust-ible.] Not to be drawn all away; not to be spent.

Reflect on the variety of combinations which may be made with number, whose stock is inexhaustible, and truly infinite.
Locke.

The stock that the mind has in its power, by varying the idea of space, is perfectly inexhaustible, and to it can multiply figures in infinite.
Locke.

EXISTENT. adj. [in and existent.]
Not having being; not to be found in nature.

To express complexed significations, they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inconsistent.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXISTING IN SOMETHING ELSE. This use is rare.

We doubt whether these heterogeneities be so much as inconsistent in the concrete, whence they are obtained.
Boyle.

INEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and existence.]
Want of being; want of existence.

He calls up the heroes of former ages from a state of inexistence to a form and diversity his poem.
Broome on the Odyssey.

INEXORABLE. adj. [inexorable, Fr. in-exorable, Lat.] Not to be entreated;
not to be moved by entreaty.

You are more inhuman, more inexorable,
Oh ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania!
Shakespeare.

Inexorable dog! Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

The teenage Inexorable calls to penance.
Milton.

The guests invited came,
And with the rest the inexorable dame.
Dryden.

The inexorable gates were barr'd,
And nought was seen, and nought was heard.
Pope.

But dreadful gleams, thick of woe
We can be deaf to the words of so sweet a charmer, and inexorable to all his invitations.
Rogers.

INEXPEDIENCE. } n. f. [in and expedi-INEXPEDIENT. } ency.] Want of fitness; want of propriety; unsuitableness to time or place; inconvenience.

It concerneth superiors to look well to the expediency and inexpediency of what they enjoy in indifferent things.
Sanderfon.

INEXPEDIENT. adj. [in and expedient.] Inconvenient; unfit; improper; unsuitable to time or place.

It is not inexpedient they should be known to come from a person altogether a stranger to chym-ical affairs.
Boyle.

We should be prepared not only with patience to bear, but to receive with thankfulness a repulse, if God should see them to be inexpedient.
South.

INEXPERIENCE. n. f. [inexperience, Fr.
in and experience.] Want of experimental knowledge; want of experience.

Thy words at random argue thine inexperience.
Milton.

Prejudice and self-sufficiency naturally proceed

INEXPIABLE. adj. [inexpiable, French; inexpiable, Latin.]

1. Not to be atoned.

2. Not to be mollified by atonement.

Love seeks to have love:
My love how couldst thou hope, who tookst the way
To raise in me ineptible hate?
Milton.

INEXPIABLY. adv. [from inexpiable.]
To a degree beyond atonement.

Excursions are ineptibly bad,
And 'tis much sicker to leave out than add.
Rogers.

INEXPLEABLY. adv. [in and explic, Lat.]
Infatigably. A word not in use.

What were these harpies but flatterers, detors, and the inexplicably covetous?
South.

INEXPLICABLE. adj. [inexplicable, Fr. in and explic, Lat.] Incapable of being explained; not to be made intelligible;
not to be disentangled.

What could such apprehensions breed, but, as their nature is, inexplicable passions of mind, desires abhorring what they embrace, and embracing what they abhor?
Hooker.

To me at least this seems inexplicable, it lights be nothing else than prethion or motion propagated through ether.
Newton.

None eludes sagacious reason more,
Than this obscure inexplicable power.
Blackmore.

INEXPLICABLY. adv. [from inexplicable.]
In a manner not to be explained.

INEXPRISABLE. adj. [in and express.]
Not to be told; not to be uttered; unutterable.

Thus when in orbs
Of circuit ineptishole they flood,
Och within orb.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of human nature, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy and secret inexplicable communications.
South.

The true God had no certain name given to him for Father, and God, and Creator, are but titles arising from his works; and God is not a name but a notion ingrafted in human nature of an inexplicable being.
Stillingfleet.

There is an imitable grace in Virgil's words: and in them principally consists that beauty which gives to ineptible a pleasure to him who best understands their force: this diction of his is never to be copied.
Dryden.

INEXPRESSIBLY. adv. [from ineptible.]
To a degree or in a manner not to be uttered; unutterably.

God will protect and reward all his faithful servants in a manner and measure ineptibly abundant.
Hammond.

He began to play upon it: the found was exceeding sweet, and wrought into a variety of tunes that were ineptibly melodious.
Addison.

INEXPUGNABLE. adj. [inexpugnable, Fr. inexpugnabilis, Lat.] Impregnable; not to be taken by assault; not to be subdued.

such a vehement and ineptible appetite of co-pulation?
Roy.

INEXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguish-ible, Fr. in and extinguo, Lat.] Unquenchable.

Pills, flatters, and other memorials, are a fatal poison to an ostentatious life, and show an inextinguishable desire which all men have of it.
Greene.

INEXTRICABLE. adj. [inextricable, Fr.
inextricabilis, Lat.] Not to be disentangled; not to be cleared; not to be set free from obscurity or perplexity.

He that should try inextricable knots, only to haste the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not to have learned his generation.
Erasmus of Perity.

Stopt by awful heights, and gulf his miened
Of wisdom, and of vast omnipotence,
Saw to the end, fronts, and doors in wonder gaze,
Lost in the wild inextricable maze.
Pope.

Men are lost into inextricable mazes by setting up the natives as judges of the world.
The Lock.

INEXTRICABLY. adv. [from inextricable.]
To a degree of perplexity not to be dis-entangled.

The mechanical atheist, though you grant him his laws of mechanism, is nevertheless inextricably puzzled and baffled with the first formation of animals.
Bentley.

In vain they strive; th' insatiable flames deny,
Extricably firm, the power to fly.
Pope.

in and fecio, Latin; inficere, French.]

INF

To strike with folly; to deprive of understanding.

The judgment of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared to derivation, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked, and suffering even those, out of a confidence in their guilt, to grow more wicked. Chambers.

It is the returning of the vices and follies that had long overspread the infatuated world:
a prime branch of that design of Christ sending his disciples. Hanmer.

Many hypocrites,
That fly to seek one thing, another thou,
Dost call on me to find, by enchanting words,
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose. Shakespeare.

the notion, that, if a cow fall into a river, it is one but an old woman is clapt upon her back, and she is infatuated. Southey's Poet.

The carriage of our attitudes of infatuation is: no danger to infatuate, no privacy to expose at as theirs. Southey.

INFATIGABLE. n. f. [from infatigable, Lat.]
The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the desire of wicked interests, and false prophecies, as in-just with God to limit the greatest abilities, and the greatest infatigable. Southey.

INFATIGABLE. n. f. [from infatigable, Lat.]
The act of making unlucky. An old and elegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the from himself, to he did not observe, that he withdrew a bird of misdeed, and infatigable
upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick. Shakespeare.

INFATIGABLE. adj. [in and fatigable.] Impracticable; not to be done.

This is to defeat and infatigable, that it may will drive mankind to despair of success. Southey.

TO INFLECT. v. a. [inflectere, Fr. inflectere,
Latin.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to lead by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of these fantastical men inflected the
that children and musicians call for. Southey.

Thy eyes, sweet lady, have inflected my
the nature of bad news inflects the mind. Southey.

Every day
It would not be a inflect, that if the king
Should without the inflect, he'd carry it to
To make the inflect his. Southey.

INFLECT. v. a. [inflectere, Fr. inflectere,
Latin.]

with communicated qualities; to lead
by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of these fantastical men inflected the
that children and musicians call for. Southey.

Thy eyes, sweet lady, have inflected my
the nature of bad news inflects the mind. Southey.

Every day
It would not be a inflect, that if the king
Should without the inflect, he'd carry it to
To make the inflect his. Southey.

INFLECT. v. a. [inflectere, Fr. inflectere,
Latin.]

2. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to lead
by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of these fantastical men inflected the
that children and musicians call for. Southey.

Every day
It would not be a inflect, that if the king
Should without the inflect, he'd carry it to
To make the inflect his. Southey.

INFLECT. v. a. [inflectere, Fr. inflectere,
Latin.]

2. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to lead
by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of these fantastical men inflected the
that children and musicians call for. Southey.

Thy eyes, sweet lady, have inflected my
the nature of bad news inflects the mind. Southey.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakespeare's Cymb.
The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Vomelsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to cause thy curdled self. Shakespeare.
Hence.

Tell that th' infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The transmutation or emotion of the humors and more any parts of bodies, as in cold and resolutions, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal, but without there is a number of the complexion both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no till at all. Boerhaave.

Infectious. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicable qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee. Shakespeare.
In a house,
Where the infectious pestilence did reign.

Shakespeare's
Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are caught in the spirit, and not so much in the humors, and therefore pass easily from body to body: such as pox, measles, and lippitudes. Bacon.
Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of some poisons, that are received only by the smell.

Infectiously. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will doles, that is infectious
To what infectiously itself affects. Shakespeare.

Infectiousness. n. f. [from infectious.]
The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

Infective. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of acting by contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Shakespeare.

Infectundus. n. f. [infectundus, Latin.]
Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, dying, or being rendered infectundus in the water, or the air; but in the earth the vigorous is long preserved. Boerhaave.

Infectundity. n. f. [infectunditas, Latin.]
Want of fertility; barrenness.

Infercity. n. f. [infercity, French; in-fercity, Latin.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infercity of the present state, we were made wise and happy.

Here is our great infercity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can in-veridically manifest all the parts of a complexion. Watts.

Inferer. v. a. [inferer, Fr. infero,
Latin.]

To bring on; to induce.

Vomit infer some small detriment to the lungs.

To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.

Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve

To glorify the Maker and infer
Thee also happier, shall not be withheld
By hearing. Milton.

Great.

Or bright, infer not excellence: the earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glittering, say not old good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

One would wonder how, from so differing instances, they should all infer the same conclusion.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing public esteem, by deserving well of mankind, and each opportunity is all ways infer obligations.

To offer; to produce. Not in use.

I will with child play'd the orator,
In infer at mastery of my tongue. Shakespeare.

Infer. n. f. [infer, Fr. from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous argument.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet more and more mistaken in the train of reasoning.

These inferences or conclusions are the result of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument.

Inferable. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and from presented mediums, erect conclusions no way inferable from our premises.

Inferiority. n. f. [inferiority, French, from inferior.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow, and therefore we are to respect it with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied. Diderot.

Inferior. adj. [inferior, Latin, inferior, French.]

1. Lower in place.

2. Lower in station or rank of life: correlative to superior.

Render me more equal, or perhaps Superior, for inferior who I live? Milton.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with little gift is even.
And he that inferior his life of heav'n. Dryden.
I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferior to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferior and particular propositions.

Inferiour. n. f. [from the adjective.]
One in a lower rank or station than another.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferi-ours than by diminishing him.

Infernal. adj. [infernal, French; infernus, Latin.] Hellish; tartarean; detestable.

His pigmantic limbs with large embraces,
In folds more acres of infernal space. Dryden.

Infernal Stone. n. f.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hall's Mat. Med.

Infertile. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity; infecund.

Ignorance being infertile, like stiff clay, and infertile soil, when pride comes to teach and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable.

Government of the Tongue.

Infertility. n. f. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

The fine discomposure of the air that occasioned the present occasioned the infertility or more effects of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either scarce or, or every unwholesome. Hall's Mat. Med.

To infertile, v. a. [infertile, French; infertile, Latin.] To make; to diminish; to plague.

Unfruitful; barren.
Come gently, I will wait with thee, I will wait
When with the wind the eyes are closed,
And hearts of grief and love are dead.

They ceased not in the night, but to strengthen that part which they thought most weak, and by all means, a collection of more grounds, there were several advances and improvements.

Although they were people of infertile and infertile land of all others, yet with the industry of labor to work the ground of their nature, the more laborious and was expanded.

They were no more, as infertile, a tedious person, but they were men for men, but of so much quality, as it was apparent that they came not from the point of view, even in the point of view, and in the point of view.

They, as well as infertile, they, with the like eyes and infertile, them in the point of view.

So, as infertile, and in the point of view.

Infertile. n. f. [infertile, Latin.]
Unfruitfulness; want of fecundity.

Infertile. adj. [infertile, Latin.] Rankling; inveterate. Obsolete.

The cruel creature, mortal of that old infertile kind, the whole mother felt,
So soon as Charon he did hold.

His heart with vegetal matter only built. Spenser.

Infertile. n. f. [infertile, Latin.]
The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.

Another military provision was conventional and by tenure, upon the infertile of the tenant, and was usually called knight's tenure. Hale.

Infidel. n. f. [infidelle, Fr. infidels, Latin.] An unbeliever; a miscreant;
a pagan; one who rejects Christianity.

I shaming her, it flew and many, yet not to you best it in an infidel, as in those times some widows chafed and died, for the advancement of their estate in this world.

Infidelity. n. f. [infidelité, Fr. infidelitas, Latin.]

1. Want of faith.

The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of infidelity the manners of infidelity. Locke's Rule of Living Holy.

2. Disbelief of Christianity.

One would fancy that infidelity would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervors of religion; but to it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fervor and contention, as it is the safety of mankind depended upon it. Johnson's Spectator.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.

The infidelity on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this bubble of life render it silly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

Infinite. adj. [infinitus, Fr. infinitus,
Latin.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think?
A thousand ages in that sea must sink:
Time's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controls
The inward bent and motion of our souls!

Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease? Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large ideas;
as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
Our vast conceptions are by twining brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Denham.

1. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

INFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.]

1. Without limits; without bounds; immensely.

Nothing may be infinitely desired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.

2. In a great degree.

This is Antonio, Shakespeare.
To whom I am to infinitely bound.

The king saw that contrariwise it would follow, that England, though much less in territory,
yet should have infinitely more soldiers of their native forces than both other nations have. Bacon's Henry VII.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have pretended to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.

INFINITENESS. n. f. [from infinite.] Immensity; boundlessness; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightiness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weaknesses. Taylor.

INFINITE-SIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFINITIVE. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke.

INFINITUDE. n. f. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rul'd, flood vast infinitude confin'd. Milton.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and tends upon the incompatibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that incompatibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out,
and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Addison's Spectator.

INFINITY. n. f. [infiniet, French; infinitus,
Latin.]

1. Immenity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Ray.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God; therefore he is our felicity and bliss. Hooker.

2. Endless number. A hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Brown.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbuth.

INFIRM. adj. [infirmus, Fr. infirmus, Lat.]

1. Weak; feeble; disabled of body.

Here stand I your brave;

A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man. Shakespeare.

2. Weak of mind; irresolute.

I am afraid to think what I have done:

Look on 't again, I dare not.

— Infirm of purpose;

Give me the dagger. Shaksp. Macbeth.

That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty, and infirm sex, forgiv'n;
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. Not stable; not solid.

He who fixes upon false principles, treads upon infirm ground, and so sinks; and he who falls in his deductions from right principles, stumbles upon firm ground, and falls. South.

TO INFIRM. v. a. [infirmus, Fr. infirmus, Latin.] To weaken; to shake; to enfeeble. Not in use.

Some contrary spirits will object this as a sufficient reason to infirm all those points.

The spleen is unjustly introduced to infirm rate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown.

INFIRMARY. n. f. [infirmarie, French.]

Lodgings for the sick.

These buildings to be for privy lodgings on both sides, and the end for privy galleries, whereof one should be for an infirm, if any special person should be sick. Bacon.

That warranteth by law to be thy privilege:

I am with child, ye bloody homicides. Shaksp.

If he had done or said any thing amiss, he desired their worship to think it was his infirmities.

Are the infirmities of the body, pains, and diseases his complaints? His faith reminds him of the day when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. Rogers.

2. Failing; weakness; fault.

A friend should bear a friend's infirmities;
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Shaksp. Caesar.

Many infirmities made it appear more requisite, that a wiser man should have the application of his interest. Clarendon.

How difficult is it to preserve a great name, when he that has acquired it, is so obnoxious to such little weaknesses and infirmities; as are no small diminution to it. Addison.

3. Disease; malady.

General laws are like general rules of physick, according whereunto, as now, no wise man will desire himself to be enerv'd, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard that thereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident, may.

Some men may be depraved
by the infirmity.

INFIRMITY. n. f. [infirmus, Fr. infirmus, Lat.] Weakness; feebleness.

proceed upon influence from particular leaders and inflammers. Shaksp.

INFLAMMABILITY. n. f. [from inflammable.] The quality of catching fire.

This it will do, if the ambient air be impure with subtle inflammabilities. Brown.

Choler is the most inflammable part of blood; whence, from its inflammability, it called a sulphur. Hale.

INFLAMMABLE. adj. [French.] Easy to be set on flame; having the quality flaming.

The juices of olives, almonds, nuts, &c.
pine-apples, are all inflammable. Boyle.

Lectus thinks it possible to extract an inflammable oil from the stone asbestos. Willis.

Out of water grow all vegetable and animal substances, which consist as well of sulphureous and inflammable parts, as of earthy and aca-rescent ones. Newton's Optics.

Inflammable spirits are subtle volatile liquid which come over in distillation, miscible with water, and wholly combustible. Arbuthnot.

INFLAMMABLENESS. n. f. [from inflammable.] The quality of easily catching fire.

We may test of the inflammableness of bodies.

even ships upon their waters. Spenser.

An old religious uncle of mine was, to his youth, an inland man. Shakespeare.

A tabernacle shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state

Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakespeare.

This person did publish a pamphlet printed in England for a general excite, or inland duty. Swift.

INLAND, n. f. Interior or midland parts.

Out of these small beginnings, gotten near to the mountains, did they spread themselves into the inland. Spenser.

They of those marches shall defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers. Shak.

The rest were all
Far to th' inland retir'd, about the walls Of Pandemonium. Milton.

INLANDER, n. f. [from inland.] Dwell-ler remote from the sea.

The true name is given unto the inlanders, or midland inhabitants of this island. Brown.

To INLAND, v. a. [in and lapido, Latin.] To make stony; to turn to stone.

Some natural spring waters will inlapidate
wood, so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under the water shall be tor-red into a kind of gravelly stone. Bacon.

To INLAY, v. a. [in and lay.]

1. To diversify with different bodies inserted into the ground or substratum.

Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay,
Broder'd the ground. Milton.

To INLAY, v. a. [in and lay.] To clear of outlawry or attendance.

It should be a great wrong to have them to make laws, who themselves were not inlaid. Bacon.

INLET, n. f. [in and let.] Passage;
place of ingress; entrance.

Doors and windows, inlets of men and of light,
I couple together, I bind their dimensions, brought under one. Watson.

She through the porch and inlet of each little Drop in ambrosial oils till the revis'd. Milton.

I declare any one to assign any temple inlet, which is not received from one of these inlets. Locke.

A fine bargain indeed, to part with all our commodious parts, which the greater the inlet is are to much the better, for the imaginary pleasure of a fright shore. Bentley.

Islets amongst broken lands and islands. Flax.

INLY, adj. [from in.] Interior; internal; secret.

Did'st thou but know the inly touch of love,
Then would'st as soon go kindly face with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Shakespeare.

INLY, adv. Internally; within; secretly; in the heart.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker ead. Spenser.

INN

I've inn wept,
Or should have spoke ore this. Shakespeare.
Whereat he inn ca'd, and as they talk'd,
Scote him into the midst with a flame,
That beat out life. Milton.

These growing thoughts, my mother soon perceive'd.
By words at times cast forth, inn repic'd. Milt.
The soldiers shont around with g. a'ious rage;
He prais'd their ardour: inn pleas'd to see His host. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

INNATE. n. f. [inn and mate.] Innates are those that he admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansion-house, passing in and out by one door.
Cowell.

So spake the enemy of mankind, in Jos'd
In serpent, innate bad! and toward Eve Addrest his way. Milton.

There he dies, and leaves his face
Growing into a nation; and now grown, Suspected to a frequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as innate guests Too numerous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife.
If thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt None but an innate foe could force us out. Dryden.

INNOST. adj. [from inn.] Deepest within;
remotest from the surface.

This you must dig with mattock and with spade

And pierce the innost centre of the earth. Shakj.
Rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my innost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison.

Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or innost, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.

He lends a dreadful groan: the rocks around
Through all their innost hollow caves resound.
Pope.

I got into the innost court. Gulliver.

INN. n. f. [inn, Saxon, a chamber.]
1. A house of entertainment for travellers.

How all this is but a fair inn,
Of forest guests which dwell within. Sidney.
Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doom
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;
But, after death, the trial is to come
When best shall be to them that lived best. Fairy Queen.

Now day is spent,
Therefore with me ye may take up your inn.
Fairy Queen.

The west, that glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Lake pilgrims to the appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.
Dryden.

One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another. Loe's.

2. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.

outward.

Put th' elfin knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and fill'd his innier thought.
Spenser.

This attends the soul,
Governs the innier man, the nobler part;
That other o'er the body only reigns. Milton.

Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the innier parts of America. Addison's Spectator.

The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer part, for the innier part, where the papilla are composed, is muscular. Green.

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch prais'd;
Then to his innier court the guests convey'd.
Pope.

INNERMOST. adj. [from inner.] It for ms less proper than innost.] Remotest from the outward part.

The reflected beams of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the speculum, where the rays appear'd, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rays. Newton.

INNHOLDER. n. f. [inn and hold.] A man who keeps an inn; an innkeeper.

INNING. n. f. Lands recovered from the sea. Amfworth.

What comfort does overflow the devout soul, from a consciousness of its own innocence and integrity! Tillotson.

2. Freedom from guilt imputed.

INN

It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my what's part black. Shaksp.

If truth and upright innocency tell me,
I'll to the king my master. Shakspere.

3. Harmlessness; innoxiousness.

The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of various which the mountains and the winds cause ours: 'twas suited to a golden age, and to the full innocency of nature. Parnet's Essay.

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.

Large this childhood proof,
Beaute what follows is pure innocence. Shaksp.
We laugh at the mance of apes, as well as the innocence of children. Leys.

INNOCENT. adj. [innocent, French;

Whether quails, from any peculiarity of situation, do innocuously feed upon belladonna, rather sometimes but medicially ate the same.
Boerhaave's Vulgar Error.

INNOUOUSNESS. n. f. [from innocuous]

Harmlessness.

The blow which shakes a wall, or beats down, and kills men, hath a greater effect on mind than that which penetrates into a mind and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of effect makes, that, although in itself it be great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Dryden.

To INNOVATE. v. a. [innovare, innovo, Latin.]

1. To bring in something not known fore.

Men pursue some few principles which have chanced upon, and care not to innove which draws unknown inconveniences. Boerhaave.

INN

Former things
 See set aside like abdicated kings;
 And every moment alters what is done,
 And innovates soon as till then unknown.
Drayden

Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate.
Drayden

To change by introducing novelties.
 From his attempts upon the civil power, he proceeds to innovate God's worship.
South

INNOVATION. n. f. [innovation, French, from innovare.] Change by the introduction of novelty.
 The love of things ancient doth argue stayedness, but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations.
Hooker
 It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innoveth greatly, but quietly and by degrees.
Bacon's Essays

Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution.
Swift

INNOVATOR. n. f. [innovateur, French; from innovare.]
 1. An introducer of novelties.
 I attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
 A foe to th' publick weal.
Shakespeare
 He that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator; and if time of countie alter things to the worse, and wisdom had counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end?
Bacon's Essays

One that makes changes by introducing novelties.
 He counsels them to detect and persecute all innovators of divine worship.
South

INNOXIOUS. adj. [innocius, Latin.]

Brown's Vulgar Errors

INNOCUOUSNESS. n. f. [from innocius.]
 Harmlessness.

INNUNDO. n. f. [innuendo, from innuere, Latin.] An oblique hint.
 As if the commandments that require obedience and forbid murder, were to be indited for rebellious innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned.
U. Strange
 Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo.
Dryden
 Pursue your trade of scandal-picking;
 Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
 Your innuendoes, when you tell us,
 That Stella loves to talk with fellows.
Swift

INNUMERABLE. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumérabilis, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.
 You have sent innumerable substances to furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways for multitudes.
Shakespeare

INO

Cover me, ye pines,
 Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs
 Hide me where I may never see them more.
Milton

In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts.
Take

INNUMERABLY. adv. [from innumerable.]
 Without number.

INNUMEROUS. adj. [innumerus, Latin.]
 Too many to be counted.
 'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheering,
 In this close dungeon of innumerable boughs.
Milton

I take the wood,
 And in thick shelter of unnumerable boughs,
 Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows.
Pope

TO INOCULATE. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See ISOCULATION.
 Nor are the ways alike in all
 How to ingraft, how to inoculate.
May's Virgils
 Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree. inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month.
Frylyn
 But various are the ways to change the flat;
 To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate.
Drayden

TO INOCULATE. v. a. To yield a bud to another stock.
 Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall rethink of it.
Shakespeare's Hamlet
 Thy stock is too much out of date,
 For tender plants to inoculate.
Cleveland
 Where lies, in a lovely brown,
 Inoculate carnation.
Cleveland

INOCULATION. n. f. [inoculatio, Latin; from inoculare.]
 1. The act of inserting the eye of a bud into another stock.
 Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone fruit, and upon oranges and jasmynes. Choose a smooth part of the stock, then with your knife make an horizontal cut across the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock, then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing. then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud.
Miller
 In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation.
Howell

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection.
 It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease.
Arbuthnot

INOCULATOR. n. f. [from inoculare.]
 1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.
 2. One who propagates the small-pox by inoculation.

INO

Had John a Gaddesden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators.
Friend's History of Phisick

INQUEST. n. f. [enquest, French; inquisition, Latin.]

1. Judicial inquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them, is given in? Atterb.

2. In law.

The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff; and as they bring in their verdict to judgment passes: for the judge saith, The jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge. Cowell.

3. Inquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science. South.

INQUIETUDE. n. f. [inquietude, Fr. inquietudo, inquietus, Lat.] Disturbed state; want of quiet; attack on the quiet.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him at home from any farther inquietude. Wotton

INTRANQUILITY. n. f. [in and tranquility.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquility which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRINSITIVE. adj. [intrinsic, Lat.]

[In grammar.] A verb intrinsic is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object: as, curro, I run. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

INTRINSUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutabile.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutabile, and therefore call it liquor eternus. Ray on the Creation.

TO INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times decas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the man chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings he intreasure'd. Shaksp.

TO INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.] To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another; with on.

Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. King Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

TO INTRENCH. v. a.

1. To break with his intrench'd, and care sat on his tided check. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrench'd in their camp.

INTRESCUANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hammer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may't thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakespeare.

INTRESCIMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Argyle.
Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Iken's dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, French.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gallat's Travels.

INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odysses is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that tale with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Latin.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His stile was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

TO INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intreated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions into which we are so intricately engag'd, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Samuel.

INTRIGUE. n. f. [inrigue, French.]

INT

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man, These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues.

Now love is dwindled to intrigues, And marriage grown a money league.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use. Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem.

To INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

INTRIGUER. n. f. [intrigueur, Fr. from intrigue.] One who buies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

INTROSPECTION. n. f. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The usages of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and note that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination.

INTROVENT. adj. [intro and venio Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obtained, from the commixture of introvent nations, either by commerce or conquest.

To INTROUDE. v. n. [introduo, Latin.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit want edge And manners, to introduce where I am guest.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might to enter, as not to introduce, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence.

2. It is followed by on before persons, or personal possessions.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship introdues on your repose, and comes thus late.

To greet you with the tidings of success. Some thoughts rise and introduce upon us, while we shun them; others fly from us, when we would hold them.

3. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted: sometimes with into.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, introducing into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind.

To INTROUDE. v. a. To force without right or welcome: commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.

Not to introduce one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds that up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be to fool him as to pry into.

INTRUDER. n. f. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

Unnecessarily intruder thou art! Shakespeare
Go, thou intruder! over-weening slave!
Beside thy fawning smiles on equal faces

They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew that lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Darwin on Ireland

Will you a bold intruder never learn
To know your basket, and your bread discern?

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. Locke

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame. Adelphi's Freethinker

It will be said, I handle an art no way fitted either to my employment or fortune, and to be charged with intrusion and impertinence.

INTRUST. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value; or, we intrust another with something; or we intrust something to another.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it. Clarendon

Receive my counsel, and securely move; intrust thy fortune to the powers above. Dryden

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword for Rome's defence, intrusted to our care? Addis

He composed his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his servant. Arbuthnot

INTUITION. n. f. [intuitus, intuor, Lat.] Sight of any thing, used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him.

The truth of these propositions we know by a simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke

Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is indemonstrable. Glanville

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South

He their single virtue did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement and disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke

Lately flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstract notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see exist in one person. Bentley

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith, being here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or ministerial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work. Hooker

The soul receives Discursive of intuitive. Milton

INTUITIVELY. adj. [intuitivement, Fr.]

Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the teacher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his? Hooker

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning

INTUMESCENCE. } n. f. [intumescence, INTUMESCENT. } Fr. intumesco, Lat.]

Swelling; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the terreous parts at the bottom, as they are more hardy or easily moved, they variously intumesce, or end their intumescences. Brown

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and occasions an earthquake. Woodward

INTURGESCENCE. n. f. [in and turgesco, Lat.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescence caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it along them. Brown's Vulgar Errors

With dangerous expedition they invade,
Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton

Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending towers shall heaven invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

These shall be sedition among men, and invading one another, they shall not regard their kings. 2 Ulfers

Thou think'st tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee:
But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. Shakespeare, King Lear

3. To violate by the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your toes are such, as they, not you, have made;

And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden

INVADER. n. f. [from invado, Latin]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon

Their piety
In sharp contest of battle found no aid Against invaders. Milton's Paradise Lost

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. 1 Sam.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South.

The nations of th' Ausonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryden.
William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1060, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time 'till now, for one entire length of time, it shows at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of a disease.
What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbuthnot.

INVASIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other men's possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By gassing nations hated and obey'd,
Lord of the deserts that their swords had made. Arbuthnot.

INVECTIVE. n. f. [invektive, French; invektica, low Latin.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the fibres of glosing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invektives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of christian duty. Hooker.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the word, for an invektive, 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryd. Juv.

2. It is used with against.

So deep-rate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invektives 'gainst the officers. Shaksp.
Casting off respect, he fell to bitter invektives against the French king. Bacon's Hen. vii.

3. Less properly with at.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invektives we make at their supposed errors fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.

INVECTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invektive muse
Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVECTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively.

Thus most invektively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court,
Yes, and of this our life; wearing that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants. Shaksp.

IN V

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their investments shew.
Shakespeare.
You, my lord archbishop,
Whose fee is by a civil peace maintained, Whole beak the silver hand of peace hath tous'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war?
Shakespeare.

INVE'TERACY. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.]

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. In law.

Issue hath divers applications in the common law, sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expenes of suit; sometimes for profits of lands or tenements; sometimes for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury.
Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and to grow rather to a demurrer, if it be questio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be questio facti. Cowell.

To ISSUE. v. n. [from the noun; issere,
French; uscire, Italian.]

2. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezek.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History.

Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton.

Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an irruption; to break out.

Three of matter Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakspere.

See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.
Hark, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friends, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Strait issue through the sides assembling fawns. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithaceniens flind,
And hurl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings.

4. To be produced by any kind.

Their altars issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes made with a belly towards the lower end,
and then issuing into a strait concave again. Bacon.

To ISSUE. v. a.

1. To fend out; to fend forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.

It is commonly followed by a participle, out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some noblemen published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mooring god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deluges. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryd.
They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew.

I have done this;
For which the Heav'ns, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

ISTHMUS. n. f. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impreguably fortified. Sandys' Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brerewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it.
Stillingfleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Cicero.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT. pronoun. [hit, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself, but requireth another word to be joined with him to show his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Brandsall against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop to low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it, Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Platoun.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with too much strength, that the whole fabric began to melt.
Addison's Freeholder.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pectancy. Swift.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general?
—Even so
As with a man by his own aims impos'd,
And with his charity damn'd. Shakspere.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave.
To each meanted will. Shakspere's Henry VIII.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching toe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thence his length. Hudibras.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the sight of Thermopylae, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people laugh it profanely in tricking up their children, and yet flatter their minds. Locke.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Spekt.

Whether the charmer finer it, or faint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicciously, or rudely to persons.

Let us after him,
Whole care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless knave. Shakspere's Macbeth.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakspere's King John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word Macduff is fled to England. Shaksp. Macbeth.

'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shaksp. Coriol.
'Tis three that early taunt the female soul. Pope.

ITCH. n. f. [itchea, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overpreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised, as microscopes have discovered, by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Love and Liberty
Creep in the minds and mows of our youths,
That gull the stream of virtue they may strive
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shakspere's Temon.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, wherewith thou canst not be healed. Deut.

As it divinity had catch'd
The itch our purpose to be watch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. Jefferson.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servants' company, a child is to be kept,
not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when generous Manly raves,
All know thy virtue, for he thins them knaves,
When universal homage I musta pay,
All for thy vice, and all of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

ITE

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wigman.
My right eye itches; some good luck is near, perhaps my Amethyst may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. The same appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Matter Shallow, you have yourself been a great itcher, then know a man of peace. — Mr. Pate, though now I be old, and of the present times I stand out, my finger itches to interfere. Shakespeare.

Cathus, you yourself are not free, demand to have an itching palm, to tell you what your offices for gold. — Shelley.
The itching ears, being an epidemic disease, gave her opportunity to every inaudible talk. Dryden of Pope.

All this I see full an itching to decide, And you would be upon the launching hole. Pope.

2. A hint; an intimation.

If this discourse have not concluded our weaknets, I have one item more of mine: it knows how to be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Gouldie.
TO ITERATE, v. a. [Latin.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftener than any other part of scripture includes, the cause wherefore we mix the psalm together with their minister, and not the minister alone, to read them, as other part of scripture be doth. Hooker.

In the last ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books, whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind, in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the heart and will. Hooker.

The king, to his decency towards the French king, sent a very solemn ambassage to intimate unto him the desire of his estate, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's History.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds, the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly; the other in concurrence, when the sound returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Aches burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the first thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown.

The milk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs,
With large and juicy offspring. Philips.

To JUKE. v. n. [jucher, French.]

1. To perch upon any thing as birds.

2. Jaking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money: the money-merchant was so proud of his trail, that he went jaking and tolling of his head. L'Estrange.

JU'JUN. } n. f. [zizyphus, Lat.] A

JU'JUNKES. } plant whose flower consists of several leaves which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose.
The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone. Miller.

JU'JAP. n. f. [A word of Arabick original; julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.] An extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serving for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone.

Quincy.

Behold this cordial julap here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt.

Milton.

If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudor-ifics and cordials expel the venom, and com-temperate the heat and acrimony by julaps and emulsions. Wise's Surgery.

JU'LUS. n. f.

1. July flower.

2. Julus, ☿, among botanists, denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called, in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazels, walnut-trees, &c. Miller.

JU'LY. n. f. [Julius, Latin; juillet, Fr.]
The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Cæsar; the seventh month from January.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peacham.

JU'MART. n. f. [French.]

Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke.

To JU'MBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jombre, from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture. Locke.

JUM

Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky means make people wise;

And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

Is it not a finer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope.
That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concour of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy.

Swift.

To JU'MBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JU'MBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

Had the world been congmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Clayton.

What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice. Swift.

JU'MENT. n. f. [jument, French; jumentum, Latin.] Beast of burden.

Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation, or belching. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To JUMP. v. n. [jumpen, Dutch.]

1. To leap; to skip; to move without step or sliding.

Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and an half by the square. Shakspeare.

The herd come jumping by me,
And fearless quench their thirst, while I look on,
And take me for their fellow-citizen. Dryden.

So have I seen from Severus's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together,
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And swimming never wet a feather. Swift.

Candidates petition the emperor to entertain the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest succeeds in the office.

Gulliver's Travels.

2. To leap suddenly.

One Peregrianus jumped into a fiery furnace at the Olympic games, only to shew the company how far his vanity could carry him. Collier.
We see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion. Spectator.

3. To jolt.

The noise of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nahum.

4. To agree; to tally; to join.

Do not embrace me till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
That I am Viola. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.
In some sort it jumps with my humour.

Shakspeare.

But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish sect.

Shakspeare.

Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barbarous nations. Shakspeare.
Hercin perchance be jumps not with Lipsius.

Hakewill.

Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did sit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras.

This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;

So in this mongrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras.

Good wit jump, and mine the number of the two. More.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine.

Dryden.

I am happier for finding our judgments jump

in the notion. Pope to Swift.

To JUMP. v. a. To pass by a leap; to pass eagerly or carelessly over.

Here upon this bunk and shelve of time,
We'd jump the life to come. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.

Otherwise one man could not excel another,
but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of welldoers. Hooker.

But since to jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,

Are here arrived. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Shakspeare's Othello.

JUMP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of jumping; a leap; a flip;
a bound.

The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible.

Locke.

2. A lucky chance.

Do not exceed

The prescript of this frowl: our fortune lies Upon this jump. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. [jupe, French.] A waistcoat; a kind of loose or limber stays worn by tickly ladies.

The weeping cuckoo scar'd into a jump,
A sign the presbyter's worn to the stump.

Cleveland.

JU'NCATE. n. f. [juncade, Fr. giuncata, Italian.]

1. Cheesecake; a kind of sweetmeat of curds and fugar.

2. Any delicacy.

A goodly table of pure ivory,
All spread with juncates, fit to entertain
The greatest prince. Spenser.

With stories told of many a feat,
How fairy Mab the juncates eat. Milton.

3. A furtive or private entertainment. It is now improperly written junket in this sense, which alone remains much in use.
See JUNKET.

JU'NCOUS. adj. [juncous, Lat.] Full of bulrushes.

JUNCTION. n. f. [jonction, Fr.] Union; coalition.

Upon the junction of the two corps, our spies discovered a great cloud of dust. Addison.

JU'NCTURE. n. f. [junctura, Latin.]

1. The line at which two things are joined together.

Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, there may be ingredients of a more subtle nature, which, being extremely little, may escape unlabeled at the junctures of the diffusatory vessels, though never so carefully luted. Boyle.

2. Joint; articulation.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being less in danger of breaking than if they were all one entire bone without those gritty junctures. More.

All other animals have transverse bodies; and though some do raise themselves upon their hinder legs to an upright posture, yet they cannot endure it long, neither are the figures of junctures, or order of their bones, fitted to such a posture. Hall.

JUS

JUR'YMAST n. f. It seems to be properly durée m. ft., mât de durée, a mast made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight on by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the mizen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to last. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Lat.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unfairly just, break loose on this bad age. Dryd.

Men are commonly so just to virtue and good nests, as to practise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson.

2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.

Just balances, just weights, and a just ephah. Isaiah.

3. I know not whether just of has any other authority.

Just of thy word, in every thought sincere,
Who knew no with but what the world might hear. Pope.

4. Exact; proper; accurate.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, and his taste close. Dryden.

The sciences were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Gravelle.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heaven. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.
Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain hard encounter'g on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.

Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts' Logic.

5. Virtuous; innocent; pure.

How should man be just with God? Job.
A just man falleth seven times and riseth.

He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Matthew.

The just th' unjust to serve. Milton.

6. True; not forged.

Crimes were laid to his charge too many,
The least whereof being just, had bereav'd him of estimation and credit. Hooker.

7. Grounded on principles of justice; rightful.

Me though just right
Did first create your leader. Milton.

8. Equally retributed.

He received a just recompence of reward. Hebr.
Whole damnation is just. Romans.
As Heber sings, spread water o'er thy fields,
And a most just and glad increase it yields. Donham.

9. Complete without superfluous or defect.

He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and stout limbed, but slender. Bacon.

10. Regular; orderly.

The war shall stand rang'd in its just array,
And dreadful pomp, then will I think on thee. Addison.

11. Exactly proportioned.

The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship
To meet his grace, just distance 'twixt our armies? Shakespeare.

JUS

12. Full; of full dimensions.

His soldiers had skirmishes with the Numidians, so that once the skirmish was like to have come to a just battle. Knolles.

There is not any one particular above mentioned, but would take up the business of a just volume. Hale.

There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars. Dutche's of Newcastle.

JUST. adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.

They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are impracticable, or when as good or better may be established. Hic et.

There, ev'n just there he stood; and as the spoke,
Where last the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryden.

A few understand him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, Ex-pt ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.

It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.

The Nereids swam before
To smooth the seas; a soft etesian gale
But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryden.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having just enough, not covet more. Dryd.

3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.

Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST. n. f. [jouste, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament. Jouste is more proper.

None was either more grateful to the holders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.

What news? hold those justs and triumphs? Shakespeare.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons ranged on either side,
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.

To JUST. v. n. [jouster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.

2. To push; to drive; to joustle.

JUSTICE. n. f. [justice, French; justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due: opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam.

The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be con-servant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right: as, he proved the justice of his claim.

3. Vindicative retribution; punishment; opposed to mercy.

JUS

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut.
Let justice overtake us. Isaiah.
Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon.

4. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakespeare.

5. [justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowell.

And thou, Eildras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdras.

6. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banco Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest;
wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliæ. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhem, and such like; but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowell.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice's warrant. Prior.

7. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowell.

8. JUSTICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Foresta.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowell.

9. JUSTICES of Assize. [justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country, to take assizes;
the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowell.

10. JUSTICES in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in Eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowell.

11. JU'STICES of Gaol Delivery. [justiciarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprize those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Cowell.

12. JU'STICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendus assisus; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowell.

13. JU'STICES of Peace. [justiciarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowell.

The justice.
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise laws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakespeare.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakespeare.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JU'STICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. Not in use.

As for the title of proseripcion, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justified himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a wai. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justified by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JU'STICEMENT. n. f. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JU'STICER. n. f. [from To Justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

JU'STICESHIP. n. f. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JUSTIFIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JUSTIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton's Agonistes
Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Proust's Vulgar Errors

JUSTIFIABLENESS. n. f. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JUSTIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke

JUSTIFICATION. n. f. [justification, Fr. justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.

I hope for my brother's justification; he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakespeare.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such righteousness
To them by faith imputed, they may find Justification towards God, and peace
Of conscience. Milton's Par. Lost.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare argument of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hanmond.

JUSTIFICATION. n. f. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JUSTIFIER. n. f. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Romans.

To JUSTIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Elcano.
I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shakespeare.
They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. Matthew.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Jeh.
There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgment. Ficulus

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act of wit of man will ever justify them. Sherlock

You're neither justified nor yet accus'd. Dryden

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.
When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his credit and blood. Saucy.

What she did, whatever in itself,
Her doing is enough to justify the deed. Newton.
My unwilling fight the gods approve,
And that must justify our undivorce. Deborah.
Yet still thy tools shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Deed.
Let others justify their notions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an unintermitted tradition. Wesbury.

3. To free from guilt sin by pardon.
By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moises. Acts.

To JUSTLE. v. n. [from just, jeter, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance Puts back leave taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all recompence. Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.
The chariot shall rage in the streets, they shall justify one against another in the broad ways. Nathan.

Argo pass'd,
Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds
Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,

Tine the flash lightning. Milton's Par. Lost.

Not one starry spark,
But gods meet gods, and juggle in the dark. Lee.
Courtiers therefore justify for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden.

The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And in the dark men juggle as they meet. Dryden.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and cullies justled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shalt thy proud waves be staid; then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings and clashing in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To juggle here among a crowd. Swift.

To JUSTLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following, as out or off.

Private and single abilities should not justify out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justified off by their intrusions. Brown's Vulgar Err.

The fury commons shall respect deny,
And justify peccage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and shames of writing can ever be justified out of their possession of all libraries. Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may justify a post. Collier.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justified out, to make way for the remembrance of those weaknesses we feel. Locke.

We justified one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Madison.

JUSTLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner
Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open sight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword
Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryden.

J U T

The goddess, studious of her Grecians fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior
2. Properly; exactly; accurately.
Their awful hands inflict the late to found,
Then feet alight on hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryden

JUSTNESS. n. f. [from j. st.]

1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whole hearts with commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made.

Shakespeare

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it.

Shakespeare

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented, with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. Addison

TO JUT. v. n. [Supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from shoot.] To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

J U V

Insultrating tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awlefs thrown. Shakspeare
All the projects for jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the corners of the lower orders. Wotton

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutted to the sea. Dryden

Proke by the jutting land on either side;
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden

It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broome

TO JUTTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a brass cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shakspeare

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.]

Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust. Bacon's Essays

JUVENILITY. n. f. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulness.

The restoration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville

2. Light and careless manner.

J Y M

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilia have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications. Glanville

JUSTAPPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition, Fr.
juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition;
the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, hence the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition. Glanville

IVY. n. f. [1113, Saxon; hedera, Lat.]

A plant.

It is a parasitical plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment. Miller

A gown made of the finest wool;
A belt of straw, and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my love. Raleigh

Direct the clasping ivy where to climb. Milton

JYMOLD. adj. See GIMAL.

Their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;

And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit
Lies, foul with chew'd grafs, still and motionless Shakspeare

K.

K A L

K. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, ken, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, buck, brick, stick, pluck, check,
which were written anciently with e final; as, cloke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e
final: as, clocke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shook, leek.
The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KALENDAR. n. f. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour

Stand as accursed in the calendar. Shakspeare

KALI. n. f. [an Arabick word.] Sea weed, of the ashes of which glass is made; whence the word alkali.

K A Y

The ashes of the weed kali are sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon

KAM. adj. Crooked.

Kam, in Erse, is quaint eyed, and applied to any thing awry; clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, cross from the purpose: A-schembu,
Italian; hence our English a-kimbo.

Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam.

This is clean kam; merely awry. Shakspeare

TO KAW. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nest, set all their young ones a gaping; but having nothing in their mouths but air, leave them as hungry as before. Locke

KAW. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wing,

With her loud kaws her graven-kind doth bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden

KAYLE. n. f. [quille, French.]

KECKY. adj. [from ker.] Resembling a kee.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft ke-ky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires. Grew.

TO KEDGE. v. a. [kaghe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they let the fore-sail, or fore-top-sail and mizen, and let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger. Harris.

KEDGE. n. f. [from kedge.] A small anchor used in a river. See KEDGE.

men, German; now written, perhaps less properly, to comb.] To separate or disentangle by a denticulated instrument.

Are the men more loose than they,
And comb'd and bath'd, and rubb'd and trimm'd, Week. Ben Jonson.

My head and hair are sleek;
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek. Dryden.

TO KEN. v. a. [cennan, Saxon; kennan,
Dutch, to know.]

1. To see at a distance; to descry.

At once as far as angels ken he views
The dismal situation, waste and wild. Milton.
The next day about evening we saw, within a kenning, thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land. Bacon.

If thou ken'st from far,
Among the pleiads, a new-kindled star;
'Tis he that shines in that propitious light. Dryd.

We ken them from afar, the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms. Addison.

2. To know. Obsolete.

'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait. Shaksp.
Now plain I ken whence love his rise began:
Sure he was born some bloody butcher's son,
Bred up in shambles. Gay's Past.

KEN. n. f. [from the verb.] View; reach of sight.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakespeare.
When from the mountain top Pisanio shew'd thee,
Thou wast within a ken. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

It was a hill
Of Paradise the highest; from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken,
Stretch'd out to th' amplest reach of prospect lay. Milton.

He soon
Saw within ken a glorious angel stand. Milton.

Rude, as their ships, was navigation then;
No useful compass or meridian known:
Coasting they kept the land within their ken,
And knew the north but when the pole-star shone. Dryden.

KER

When we consider the reasons we have to think, that what he lies within our ken is but a small part of the universe, we shall discover an huge abyss of ignorance. Locke.

KE'NNEL. n. f. [chenil, French.]

1. A cot for dogs.

A dog, sure, if he could speak, had wit enough to denote his kennel. Sidney.
From both the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death. Shakespeare.

The seditions remnant within their station, which, by reason of the narrowness of the healthy multitude, might be more fitly termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.

2. A number of dogs kept in a kennel.

A little herd of English's tawny deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakespeare.

3. The hole of a fox, or other beast.

4. [kennel, Dutch; chenil, Fr. canalis,
Latin.] The water-courie of a street.

Bad humours gather to a here; or, as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in a short time their numbers increased. Hayward.

He always came in so dirty, as if he had been dragged through the kennel at a boarding-school. Arbutnot.

TO KE'NNEI. v. n. [from kennel.] To lie; to dwell; used of beasts, and of man in contempt.

Yet, when they list, would creep,
If aught disturb'd their noise, into her womb,
And kennel there; yet there full buck'd and howl'd.

Within, unseen. Milton's Par. Lost.

The dog kennelled in a hollow tree, and the cock roosted upon the boughs. L'Estrange.

KEPT. The pret. and part. pass. of keep.

KERCHIEF. n. f. [correcchie, Chaucer;
couvre, to cover, and chief, the head;
and hence a handkerchief to wipe the face or hands.]

1. A headdress.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou hast the right arch'd bent of the brow, that becomes the tire valiant.

—A plain kerchief; Sir John; my brows become nothing else. Shakespeare.
O! what a time have you chose out, braye Caus.

To wear a kerchief. Shakespeare.

The proud, stiff kerchief of the court shall rest
Well satisf'd of what they love the best. Dryd.

2. Any loose cloth used in dress.

Every man had a large kerchief folded about the neck. Hayward.

KERCHIEFED. } adj. [from kerchief.]

The fawn-away slit between two pieces of stuff. Moxon.

KE'RMES. n. f. A roundish body, of the bigness of a pea, and of a brownish red colour. It contains a multitude of little distinct granules, soft, and when crushed, yield a scarlet juice. It till lately was understood to be a vegetable excrecence; but we now know it to be the extended body of an animal parent, filled with a numerous offspring, which are the little red granules. Hill.

KERN. n. f. [an Irish word.] Irish foot-soldier; an Irish boor.

Out of the fry of these rake-hell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern supplied. Spenser.

K E S

Justice had with valour arm'd, Compell'd these skipping kerns to trust their heels. Shakspeare.
If in good plight these northern kerns arrive,
Then does fortune promise fair. Philips.
KERN. n. f. A handmill consisting of two pieces of stone, by which corn is ground.
It is written likewise quern. It is still used in some parts of Scotland.
To KERN. v. n. [probably from kernel, or, by change of a vowel, corrupted from corn.]
1. To harden as ripened corn.
When the price of corn falseth, men break no more ground than will supply their own turn, wherethrough it falseth out that an ill kerned or fayed harvest soon emptieth their old store. Caveo.
2. To take the form of grains; to granulate.
The principal knack is in making the juice,
when sufficiently boiled, to kern or granulate. Grew.
KERNEL. n. f. [cyannel, a gland, Sax.
karne, Dutch; cerneau, French.]
1. The edible substance contained in a shell.
As brown in hue
As hazle nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakspeare.
There can be no kernel in this light nut; the soul of this man is his clothes. Shakspeare.
The kernel of the nut serves them for bread and meat, and the shells for cups. More.
2. Any thing included in a husk or inte-gument.
The kernel of a grape, the fig's small grain,
Can cloath a mountain, and o'ershade a plain. Denham.
Oats are ripe when the straw turns yellow and the kernel hard. Mortimer.
3. The seed of pulpy fruits.
I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakspeare.
The apple inclosed in wax was as fresh as at the first putting in, and the kernels continued white. Bacon.
4. The central part of any thing upon which the ambient strata are concentered.
A solid body in the bladder makes the kernel of a stone. Arbutnot.
5. Knobby concretions in children's flesh.
To KERNEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

In Staffordshire, garden-rouncivals sown in the fields kernel well, and yield a good increase. Mortimer.
KERNELLY. adj. [from kernel.] Full of kernels; having the quality or resemblance of kernels.
KERNELWORT. n. f. [scrofularia.] An herb. Ansforth.
KERSEY. n. f. [karfaye, Dutch; carifée,
French.] Coarse stuff.
Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
I do forswear them; and I here protest,
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest
In rusted yeas, and honest kersey noes. Shakspeare.
His luckey with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other. Shakspeare.
The same wool one man felt it into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, and another into kersey or serge. Hale.
Thy kersey doublet spreading wide,
Drew Cicely's eye aside. Gay.
KESR. The preter tense of cast. It is still used in Scotland.

KEY

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles left. Fairfax.
KEYSTREL. n. f. A little kind of bastard hawk. Hammer.
His keffleel kind,
A pleasing vain of glory, vain did find. Fairy Queen.
Kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks. Bacon.
KEY-H. n. f. [from caicchio, Italian, a barrel.] A heavy ship: as, a bonib ketch.
I wonder
That such a ketch can with his very bulk
Take up the rays of th' beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth. Shakspeare.
KETTLE. n. f. [cehl, Sax. ketel, Dut.]
A vessel in which liquor is boiled. In the kitchen the name of pot is given to the boiler that grows narrower toward the top, and of kettle to that which grows wider. In authors they are confounded.
The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little scether shone. Dryden.
KETTLEDUM. n. f. [kettle and drum.]
A drum of which the head is spread over a body of brass.
As he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakspeare.
KEY. n. f. [ceeg, Saxon.]
1. An instrument formed with cavities correspondent to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.
If a man were porter of hell gate, he should have old turning the key.
Fortune, that arrant whore
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor.
The glorious standard left to heav'n's
With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown. Milton.
Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key,
That opens the palace of eternity, Milton.
Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South.
He came, and knocking thrice, without delay
The longing lady heards, and turn'd the key. Dryden.
2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.
Hide the key of the jack. Swift.
3. An explanation of any thing difficult.
An emblem without a key to 't, is no more than a tabula in a tub. L'Estrange.
Those notions in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts. Burnet.
Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.
4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.
Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch
the keys. Pamela.
5. [In music.] Is a certain tone where-to every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in reference to its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.

K I C

Hippolita, I wou'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakspeare.
But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack! Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song? Shakspeare.
Not now know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Hail thou to crack'd and splitted my poor tongue
In few short years, that here my only son Knows not my feeble key of untun'd notes? Shakspeare.
6. [keye, Dutch; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and unlading ships.
A key of fire run along the shore,
And lighted all the river with a blaze. Dryden.
7. Key cold was a proverbial expression,
now out of use.
Poor key cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster. Shakspeare.
KEYAGE. n. f. [from key.] Money paid for lying at the key, or quay. Dinworth.
KEYHOLE. n. f. [key and hole.] The perforation in the door or lock through which the key is put.
Make doors fast upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the keyhole. Shakspeare.
I looked in at the keyhole, and saw a well-made man. Taylor.
I keep her in one room; I lock it;
The key, look here, is in this pocket;
The keyhole, is that left? Most certain. Prior.
KEYSTONE. n. f. [key and stone.] The middle stone of an arch.
If you will add a keystone and chaprels to the arch, let the breadth of the upper part of the arch be the height of the arch. Morton.
KIBBER. n. f. [from kerb, a cut, German,
ker; from kibbe, Welsh, Minhew.]
A ulcerated chilblain; a chap in the heel caused by the cold.
It 'twere a kibe, 'twould put me to my slipper. Shakspeare.
The toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of our country, that it galls his kibe. Shakspeare.
One boasted of the cure, calling them a few kibes. Warton.
KIBED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes; as, kibed heels.
To KICK. v. a. [kauchen, German;
calcoo, Lat.] To strike with the foot.
He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him. South.
It under'd Tarentine once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.
Another, whose son had employments at court, valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning. Swift.
To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.
Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded? 1 Samuel.
Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked. Deut.
The doctrines of the holy scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book. Tillot.
KICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.
What, are you dumb? Quick, with your answer, quick!
Before my foot salutes you with a kick. Dryden.
KICKER. n. f. [from kick.] One who strikes with his foot.
KICKERAW. n. f. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, something; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kickshoe, as if he thought it used in contempt of dancing.]

KID

1. Something uncommon or fantastical; something ridiculous.

Shall we need the mops of Paris to take our youth into their slight custodies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kickshoes? Milton.

2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.

Some pigeons, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws. Shakespeare.

In wit as well as war, they give us vigour; Cressy was lost by kickshaws and soup-meagre. Fenton.

KICKSAY-WICKSEY. n. f. [from kick and wince.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hannmer.

He wears his honour in a box unseen, That hugs his kicksay-wicksey here at home, Spending his manly marrow in her arms. Shak.

KID. n. f. [kid, Danish.]

1. The young of a goat.

Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant spring. Fairy Queen.

There was a herd of goats with their young ones, upon which fight Sir Richard Graham tells, he would snip one of the kids, and carry him close to their lodging. Wotton.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw Dandled the kid. Milton.

No kids and whelps their fires and dams express; And to the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden.

2. [from cidwelen, Welsh, a faggot.] A bundle of heath or furze.

TO KID. v. a. [from the noun.] TO BRING forth kids.

KIDDER. n. f. An engrosser of land to enhance its price.

TO KIDNAP. v. a. [from kind and nap.] To steal children or other human beings.

KIDNAPPER. n. f. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings; a manstealer.

The man compounded with the merchant upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had snelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. LeStrange.

These people lie in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spectator.

KIDNEY. n. f. [etymology unknown.]

1. There are two in number, one on each side; they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which by the motion of the heart and arteries is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the serosity, being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincey.

A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his mesentery and kidneys. Wyseman's Surgery.

2. Sort; kind; in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter, a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare.

VOL. I.

KIL

There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. LeStrange.

KIDNEYBEAN. n. f. [physcolus. So named from its shape.] A leguminous plant.

Kidneybeans are a sort of cod-wait, that are very pleasant wholesome food. Mortimer's Husb.

KILDERKIN. n. f. [kindekin, a baby, Dutch.] A small barrel.

Make in the kilderkin a great bung-hole of purpose. Bacon.

A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ. But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

TO KILL. v. a. [anciently To quell; cpellan, Saxon; kelen, Dutch.]

1. To deprive of life; to put to death, as an agent.

Dar'it thou resolve to kill a friend of mine? —Please you, I'd rather kill two enemies. Shak.

Ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger. Exodus.

There was killing of young and old, making away of men, women, and children. 2 Mac.

2. To destroy animals for food.

We're mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse, To fright the animals, and to kill them up In their assign'd and native dwelling place. Shak.

Shall I take my bread, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers. 1 Samuel.

3. To deprive of life, as a cause or instrument.

The medicines, if they were used inwards, would kill those that use them; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

4. To deprive of vegetative or other motion, or active qualities.

Try with oil, or barm of drink, so they be such things as kill not the bough. Bacon.

Of mercurials mix with all animal things appears by killing it with spittle. Floyer.

KILLER. n. f. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.

What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Amphialus, when he saw his dear foster-father find him the killer of his only son? Sidney.

Wilt thou for the old lion hunt, or fill His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill, When couch'd in dreadful dens? Sandys.

So rude a time, When love was held to capital a crime, That a crown'd head could not compassion find, But dy'd, because the killer had been kind. Waller.

KILLOW. n. f. [This seems a corruption of coal and low, a flame, as foot is thereby produced.] An earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and doubtless had its name from kollow, by which name, in the north, the smut or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Woodward.

KILN. n. f. [cýln, Saxon.] A stove; a fabrick formed for admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.

I'll creep up into the chimney. —There they always use to discharge their birding pieces: creep into the kiln hole. Shakespeare.

After the putting forth in sprouts, and the drying upon the kiln, there will be gained a bulhel in eight of malt. Bacon.

Physicians chuse lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slacked. Mazon.

TO KILNDRY. v. a. [kiln and dry.] To dry by means of a kiln.

The best way is to kilndry them. Mortimer.

KIN

KILT, for killed.

Spenser.

KIMBO. adj. [a schambo, Ital.] Crooked; bent; arched.

The kimbo handles seem with bears foot curv'd, And never yet to table have been a trev'd. Dryden.

He observed them edging towards one another to whisper: so that John was forced to sit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them a-mind. Arundel not still strong of John Bull.

KIN. n. f. [cýnne, Saxon.]

1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature, but you are of kin, and to a kind to them persons not to their enemies. Bacon's Advice to Villains.

Th' unhappy Palamon, Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free, Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.

2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.

Tumultuous wars, Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound. Shakespeare.

The father, mother, and the kin beside, Were overborne by fury of the tide. Dryden.

3. A relation; one related.

Then is the soul from God; so pagans say, Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kind, Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray, A citizen of heaven, to earth confin'd. Darius.

4. The same generical class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.

The burst And the ear-deaf'ning voice of the oracle, Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense, That I was nothing. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other alkalizate salts. Boyle.

5. A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch: as, manikin, minikin, thomkin, wilkin.

KIND. adj. [from cýnne, relation, Sax.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general goodwill.

By the kind gods 'tis most ignobly done To pluck me by the beard. Shakespeare.

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil. Luke.

KIND. n. f. [cýnne, Saxon.]

1. Race; generical class. Kind in Teutonic English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hooker.

As when the total kind Of birds, in orderly array on wing, Came summon'd over Eden, to receive Their names of thee. Milton's Par. Lost.

That both are animals, I grant; but not rational; For though they do agree in kind, Specific difference we find. Hudibras.

God and Nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but kinds and companies. South's Sermons.

He with his wife were only left behind Of peris'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.

K I N

Some acts of virtue are common to heathens and christians; but I suppose them to be performed by christians after a more sublime manner than among the heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection.

Atterbury

He, with a hundred arts refin'd
Shall stretch thy conquest over half the kind.

Pope

2. Particular nature.

No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found to have so many

Bacon

3. Natural state.

He did give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them.

Bacon

The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decuma, or tithes.

Arbuth.

4. Nature; natural determination.

The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands, And in the doing of the deed of kind
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes.

Shakespeare.

Some of you on pure instinct of nature,
Are led by kind to admire your fellow-creature.

Dryden.

5. Manner; way.

Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me

As will displease you.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind, than take five in the hundred.

Bacon

6. Sort. It is a slight and unimportant sense.

Diogenes was asked in a kind of scorn, What was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answered, Because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not.

Bacon

To K'INDLE. v. a. [cinnu, Welsh; cynbelan, Saxon.]

1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea he kindleth it and baketh bread.

Isaiah.

I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some men's distempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments.

King Charles.

If this fire burns vigorously; it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force, and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun.

South.

2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat; to fire the mind.

I've been to you a true and humble wife:
At all times to your will conformable:

Ever in fear to kindle your dislike.

Shakespeare.

He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies.

Job.

Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree.

Daniel.

To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind.

Dryden.

Now is the time that takes their revels keep,
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep.

Gan.

K'INDLY. adv. [from kind.] Benevolently; favourably; with good-will.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company.

Shakespeare.

I sometime lay here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house: he used me kindly.

Shakespeare.

Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another

Romans

His grief some pity, others blame;
The fatal cause all kindly seek.

Prior

Who with less designing ends,
Kindlier entertain their friends;

With good words, and countenance sprightly,
Strive to treat them all politely.

Swift.

K'INDLY. adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]

1. Homogeneous; congenial; kindred; of the same nature.

This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby.

Hammond.

These soft fires
Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,
Of various influence foment, and warm,
Temper or nourish.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. The foregoing sense seems to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.

3. Bland; mild; softening.

Through all the living regions do't thou move,
And scatter'st, where thou goest, the kindly seeds of love.

Dryden.

Ye heav'n's, from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly dew!

Pope.

K'INDNESS. n. s. [from kind.] Kindness; beneficence; good-will; love.

If there be kindness, meekness, or gentleness, then is not her husband her enemy.

Ecclesiastes.

Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people.

Collier.

Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd.

Prior.

Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us.

Rogers.

K'INDRED. n. s. [from kind; cynpene, Saxon.]

1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; consanguinity; affinity.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own.

Dryden.

2. Relation; suit.

An old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred.

Shakespeare.

3. Relatives.

I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain.

Denham.

K'INDRED. adj. Congenial; related; cognate.

From Tuscan Corintum he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies.

Dryden.

KINE. plur. from cow.

—As the covey that you see dwells where she is kindled.

—As the covey that you see dwells where she is kindled.

—As the covey that you see dwells where she is kindled.

—As the covey that you see dwells where she is kindled.

K I N

A field I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine.

Gay.

KING. n. s. [A contraction of the Teutonic word cuning, or cuning, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength.

Verlegan.]

1. Monarch; supreme governour.

The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder.

Shakespeare.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Imparts itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters.

Shakespeare.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

Shakespeare.

The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, staidness,
Bounty, perfection, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them.

Shakespeare.

Thus states were form'd the name of king unknown,
Till common interest plac'd the sway in one:
'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a fire the sons obey'd
A prince the father of a people made.

Pope

2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine; as prince also is.

Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors.

Bacon

3. A card with the picture of a king.

The king unseen
In her hand, and mourn'd his captive

Pope

at arms, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarenceux.

Phillips

A letter under his own hand was lately shew'd me by sir William Dugdale, king at arms.

Waller

To KING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a king. A word rather ludicrous.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not.

Shakespeare

2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.

Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me with myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king.

Shakespeare

KINGAPPLE. n. s. A kind of apple.

The kingapple is preferred before the golden apple.

Adams

KINGCRAFT. n. s. [king and craft] The art of governing. A word commonly used by king James.

KINGCUP. n. s. [king and cup] The name is properly, according to Gerard, kingcob.] A flower; crowfoot.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass green, and upon his head a garland of bents, longcup, and maidenhair.

Prochaska

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows.

Gay

KINGDOM. n. s. [from king.]

1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.

K I N

You're welcome,
Most learned, reverend sir, into our kingdom.
Shakespeare.
Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan. Numb.

2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.
The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke

3. A region; a tract.
The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shakespeare.

KINGFISHER. n. f. [halcyon.] A species of bird.
When dew refreshing on the pasture fields
The moon bellows, kingfishers play on shore. Mary's Virgil.

Bitterns, herons, sea-gulls, kingfishers, and water-rats, are great enemies to fish. Mortimer.

KINGLIKE. } adj. [from king.]
KINGLY. }

1. Royal; sovereign; monarchical.
There we'll sit Ruling in large and ample empire,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms. Shakespeare.

Yet this place
Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come To reverence thee. Dryden's State of Innocence.
In Sparta a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.
The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states.

2. Belonging to a king; suitable to a king.
Why liest thou with the vile
In louthsome beds, and leav'st the kingly crown
A watch-case to a common 'larum bell? Shakespeare.
Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand
What husband in thy power I will command. Shakespeare.

3. Noble; august; magnificent.
He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprizes. Sidney.
I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts. Shakespeare.

KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty;
with superiour dignity.
Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state Inclin'd not. Milton's Par. Lost.
His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod. Dunciad.

KINGS'VIL. n. f. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of a king.
Sore eyes are frequently a species of the king's evil, and take their beginning from vicious humours influencing the tunica adnata. Wifeman.

KINGSHIP. n. f. [from king.] Royalty;
monarchy.
They designed and proposed to me the new modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. King Charles.
We know how successful the late usurper was,
while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the impotence, upon his aspiring to the same himself,

K I S

he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KING-SPEAR. n. f. [asphodelus.] A plant.

KINGSTONE. n. f. [iquatna.] A fish.
Ant. and An.

KINGSFOLK. n. f. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.
Thou'rt lords, since their first grants of thofe lands have bestowed them amongst their kins- folks. Spenser.

My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job.

KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.
The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd.
Dryden.

Let me stand excluded from my right, Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd in fight. Dryden's Fables.

There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples:
the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.

KINSWOMAN. n. f. [kin and woman.] A female relation.
A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.

The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinswoman. Dennis's Letters.

KIRK. n. f. [cynce, Saxon; kyrk.] A church. An old word yet retained in Scotland.
Home they hasten the posts to dight,
And all the kirk pillars are day-light,
When the thorn buds and sweet eglantine. Spenser.
But all the nation hath these spots,
As a church as well as kirk of Scots. Cleveland.

One party thought to rivet by the Scots,
the other confemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. K. Charles.

KIRTLE. n. f. [kyrtel, Saxon.] An upper garment; a gown.
All in a kirtle of discoloured fay
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.

What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakespeare.

Thy gowns, thy shifts, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Ralrigh.

To KISS. v. a. [cuſar, Welsh; kyss.]

1. To touch with the lips.
But who those ruddy lips can kiss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.
He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shakespeare.

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shakespeare.

2. To treat with fondness.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it, but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shaksp.

3. To touch gently.
The moon shines bright; in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakespeare.

KISS. n. f. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.
What sense had I of her stol'n kiss or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shakespeare.
Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss.
O envy not the dead, they feel not kisses! Dryd.

K I T

KISSER. n. f. [from kiss.] One that kisses.

KISSINGERUST. n. f. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.
These bak'd him kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer. King's Cookery.

KIT. n. f. [kitte, Dutch.]

1. A large bottle. Skinner.

2. A small diminutive fiddle.
'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing master's. Green's Museum.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town.

KITCHEN. n. f. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cykene, Saxon; cuisine, Fr.
cucina, Italian; kythen, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.
These being culpable of this crime, or favour-ers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heav'n, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.

He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.
Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchen-gardens. Bacon.
A kitchen-garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Spectator.

KITCHENMAID. n. f. [kitchen and maid.]
A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kit- chen.

KITCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.]
The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.
As a thirsty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barrelling the droppings and the luff
Of winking candles, which in thirty year, Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel-preaching ministry. Hudibras.

KITCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.
Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Shakespeare.

Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench. Swift.

KITCHENWORK. n. f. [kitchen and work.]
Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

KITE. n. f. [cýta, Saxon; milvus.]

1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shaksp.
The heron, when the fourth high, to us sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth wings; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.

A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.
Detested kite! thou liest. Shakespeare.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.
A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but it will not last, or childishly

K N A

make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Gov. of the Tongue.

KI'ESFOOT. n. f. A plant. Ainsw.

KI'TTEN. n. f. [kutchen, Dutch. It is probable that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.] A young cat.

That a mare will sooner drown than an horse, is not experienced: nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps or kittens. Brown.

It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wijeman.

Helen was just slept into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kitten with them fled,
As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

To KI'TTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakspeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak,
and the cat kissened in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.

To KLICK. v. n. [from clack.]

1. To make a small sharp noise.
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer or steal away suddenly with a snatch.

To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so that knab and knab may be the same.

I had much rather he knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with eaves. L'Estrange.

An ass was wishing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.

To KNABBLE. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.

Horses will knabble at walls, and rats knaw iron. Brown.

KNACK. n. f. [cnapunge, skill, Saxon.]

1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.

When I was young, I was wont
To load my shoe with knacks: I would have ransack'd

The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakspeare.

For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou dost but sigh
That thou no more shall see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shakspeare.

This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis low and filthy;
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakf.
But is 't not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flax,
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies. Ben Jonson's Cypphus.
The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware

all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address. L'Estrange.

Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.

3. A nice trick.

For how should equal colours do the knack?
Cameleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.

KNACKER. n. f. [from knack.]

1. A maker of small work.
One part for plow-right, knacker and smith. Mortimer.

2. A ropemaker. [restio, Latin.] Ainsw.
KNAG. n. f. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retained in Scotland.] A hard knot in wood.

KNAGGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; set with hard rough knots.

KNAP. n. f. [cnup, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnap, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.

You shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher bills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathered as in troughs. Bacon.

To KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break short.
He knappeth the spear in sunder.
He will knap the spears a-pieces. Shakspeare.

2. [knaap, Erse.] To strike.
make a sharp noise like that of breaking.
Knapp a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the found of the tongs. Bacon's Natural History.

To KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.

I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knapp in before they knew they were out. Wijeman.

KNAPBOTTLE. n. f. [papaver spumeum.] A plant.

To KNAPPLE. v. n. [from knapp.] To break off with a sharp quick noise.

KNAPSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till I see more religious motives than knapsacks carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once
And can foot it farthest: there are hedges in summer, and barns in winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back:
'I'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to slaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNAPWEED. n. f. [jacea, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

KNARE. n. f. [knor, German.] A hard knot.

Make of scurf lies basking on the ground,
And stubs instead of trees are found;
Or knare with knots and knares deform'd and

Head and neck, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

K N E

KNAVE. n. f. [cnapa, Saxon.]

1. A boy; a male child.
2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For as the moon the eye doth please
With gentle beams not hurting sight,
Yet hath fir sun the greater praise,
Because from him doth come her light;
So if my man must praises have,
What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.
He cats and drinks with his domestic slaves,
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cosen'd twice. Dryden.
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.
For 'twill return, and turn t' account,
If we are brought in play upon 't,
Or but by casting knaves get in,
What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNAVEY. n. f. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villany.
Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Shakspeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakspeare.
The cunning courtier should be flighted too,
Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
Like Asop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

Various tricks or practices. In the passing passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps of trifling things of more cost than value.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavey. Shakspeare.

KNAVISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.
'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knavish to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggish; mischievous.
Here she comes curst and sad;
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad. Shakspeare.

KNAVISHLY. adv. [from knavish.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

2. Waggishly; mischievously.

To KNEAD. v. a. [cnan, Saxon; kneden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakspeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be Wisdom makes him an ark, where all agree. Denham.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new-made mud
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
'Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderslood,
And pride of empire, pour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees below'd,
And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the human seasoned it with some furious particles of the ho-Addison's Spectator

K N E

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hands and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.
The cake the kneaded was the fav'ry meat. Prior.

KNEADINGTROUGH. n. f. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.
Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Exodus.

KNEE. n. f. [cneop, Sax. knee, Dut.]
1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father
Was a most faint king: the queen that bore thee
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakespeare.
Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees.
Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,

To lay down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
And cast her languishing regards above,
For help from heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

2. A piece of timber growing crooked, and to cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tugged: but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent, fall down, and kneel the way into his mercy. Shakespeare.

Return with her!

KNE'EPAN. n. f. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its fore-side. It is lost in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pulley. Quincy.

The kneecap must be shewn with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint.
Peuchan on Drawing.

To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflexion; to bend the knee.

When thou do'st ask me blessing, I'll kneel down
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakespeare.

K N I

E'er I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a recking post,
Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth
From General, his mistress, salut thou. Shakespeare.

A certain man kneeling down to him, God, Lord, have mercy upon my son, for he is lunatick. Matthew.

As soon as you are dressed, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Receive from us
Kneetribute yet unpaid, prostration vile. Milton.
KNEEL. n. f. [cniel, Welsh, a funeral pile; cnyllan, to ring, Sax.] The found of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wish them to a fairer death,
And so his knell is knoll'd. Shakespeare.

See nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shakespeare's Temp.
When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was furr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakespeare.

All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy 'till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
Th' am'rous youth around her bow'd
At night her fatal knell was rung;
I saw, and kiss'd her in her shroud. Prior.

KNEW. The preterit of know.

KNIFE. n. f. plur. knives. [cniif, Sax.
knif, Danish.] An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Come, thick night,
And seal thee in the densest smoke of hell,
That thy keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakespeare.

Most powers, forbid thy tender life.
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden's Aeneid.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife.
And trembling, in his arms, takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

KNIGHT. n. f. [cniht, Sax. knecht,
Germ. a servant, or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight. Shakespeare.

This knight; but yet why should I call him knight,

To give impiety to this rev'rent title? Shakespeare.

No squire with knight did he begin;
In parts, in manners, and in name. Hudibras.

2. Shakespeare uses it of a female; and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

K N I

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that flew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakespeare.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the puke,
Which out of it lent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fitters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT errantry. [from knight errant.]
The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out heedless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the post. A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping post, or pillory.

There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a-year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St.
George's day he was knighted. Wotton.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Harvard.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pensioned Quarles. Pope.

KNIGHTLY. adv. [from knight.] Behitting a knight; befitting a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Silney.

How darest your pride presume against my laws:
As in a listed field to fight your comrade? Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

KNIGHTHOOD. n. f. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that his nourishing, when he knight-hood swore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart. Fairy Queen.

Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour. Shakespeare.

Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in? Ben Jonson.

If you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the boys. Pope.

K N I

KNIGHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.

Arise, thou curst miscreant,

As the fair vessel to the fountain came,

Let none be startled at a vessel's name,

Tir'd with the walk, she laid her down to rest;

And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,

to take the freshness of the morning air,
And gather'd in a knot her flow'ring hair. Addison.
Any figure of which the lines frequently intersect each other.
Garden knots, the seats of houses, and all equal figures, pleasant; whereas unequal figures are but deform'd. Bacon.

Our flow'ring garden, the whole land,
A knot of words, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her knots disorder'd. Shakespeare's Tenth. 11.
It is flow'ry worthy of paradise, which not pure art
And curious fashions, but nature bloom,
Pours forth profuse on hill and dale, and plain.

Their quarters are continued interlaced knots,
Adorned with the most beautiful flowers. Milton.
Henry in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half-express'd, and half-conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase. Prior.

I would he had continued to his country,
As he began, and not unkind himself.
The noble knot he made. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Why left you wife and children?
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love?
Not all that Saul could threaten or persuade,
In this close knot, the smallest loveliness made. Cauley.

A hard part in a piece of wood caused by the protuberance of a knot, and consequently by a transverse section of the fibres. A joint in an herb.

Taking the very refuse among those served to no use, being a crooked piece of wood and full of knots, he hath carved it difficult when he had nothing else to do. William.
Such knots and crossness of grain is objected here, as will hardly suffer that form which they cry up here as the only just reformation, to go on so smoothly here as it might do in Scotland.
King Charles.

Difficulty; intricacy.

A man shall be perplexed with knots and problems of business, and contrary affairs, where the determination is dubious, and both parts of the contrariety seem equally weighty; so that, which way soever the choice determines, a man is sure to venture a great concern. South.

Any intrigue, or difficult perplexity of affairs.

When the discovery was made that the king was living, which was the knot of the play untied, the rest is shut up in the compass of some few lines. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To KNOW. v. a, pret. I have known.

[enapan, Saxon.]
1. To perceive with certainty, whether intuitive or discursive.

O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!

The memorial of virtue is immortal, because it is known with God and with men. Widdow.
The gods all things know. Milton.
Not from experience, for the world was new,
He only from their came their natures know. Donham.

We doubt not, neither can we properly say we think we admire and love you above all other men: there is a certainty in the proposition, and we know it. Dryden.

When a man makes use of the name of any simple idea, which he perceives is not understood, he is obliged by the laws of propriety, and the end of speech, to make known what idea he makes it stand for. Locke.

2. To be informed of; to be taught.

Ye shall be taught, and it shall be known to you why his head is not removed from you. Samuel.

of that they do not well know, they would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak. Bacon.

Not to know of things remote, but know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton.

In the other world there is no consideration that will sting our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly when we knew to have done better, and chose to make ourselves miserable, when we might find the way to have been happy. Tillotson.

They might understand those excellencies which they blindly valued, to not to be farther imposed upon by bad pieces, and to know when nature was well imitated by the most able masters. Dryden.

3. To be informed.

The prince and Mr. Pons will put on our jackets and apotes, and Mr. John must not know of it. Shaksp. Henry vi.

There is but one mineral body, that we know of, heavier than common quicksilver. Boyle.

4. To Know for. To have knowledge of.

A colloquial expression
He said the water itself was a good healthy water; but for the party that own'd it, he might have more diseases than he knew for. Shaksp.
